

The verb

RODNEY HUDDLESTON

- 1 Inflectional categories of the verb 74
  - 1.1 Summary presentation of the categories 74
  - 1.2 Syncretism 76
  - 1.3 The past participle 77
  - 1.4 The gerund-participle 80
  - 1.5 The plain form 83
  - 1.6 The present tense forms 84
  - 1.7 The preterite and irrealis were 85
  - 1.8 Primary and secondary forms and the category of finiteness 88
    - 1.8.1 Finiteness as a syntactic rather than inflectional category in English 88
    - 1.8.2 Constructions with a plain form verb: imperative, subjunctive, and infinitival 89
  - 1.9 Negative forms 90
- 2 Auxiliary verbs 92
  - 2.1 Distinctive syntactic properties of auxiliary verbs 92
    - 2.1.1 Primary verb negation 94
    - 2.1.2 Subject–auxiliary inversion 94
    - 2.1.3 Emphatic polarity 97
    - 2.1.4 Code: elliptical stranding and the pro-verb do 99
    - 2.1.5 Position and form 101
  - 2.2 Issues of definition and analysis 102
  - 2.3 Combinations of auxiliary verbs 104
  - 2.4 Distinctive properties of modal auxiliaries 106
  - 2.5 The auxiliaries considered in turn 108
    - 2.5.1 Can and will; would rather 108
    - 2.5.2 Must 108
    - 2.5.3 Shall and may 109
    - 2.5.4 Ought 109
    - 2.5.5 Need and dare 109
    - 2.5.6 Have; have got; had better 111
    - 2.5.7 Be 113
    - 2.5.8 Do 114
    - 2.5.9 Use 115
- 3 Tense, aspect, and mood: preliminaries 115
  - 3.1 Categories of form and categories of meaning 115
  - 3.2 Kinds of situation and aspectuality 118
    - 3.2.1 A broad classification of situations 118
    - 3.2.2 States vs occurrences 119

- 3.2.3 Achievements, accomplishments, and activities 120
- 3.2.4 Multiple situations 123
- 3.2.5 Perfective and imperfective aspectuality 124
- 4 Primary tense 125
- 4.1 Past, present, and future as relational categories 125
- 4.2 The present tense 127
  - 4.2.1 Present time reference 127
  - 4.2.2 The 'timeless' use of the present tense 129
  - 4.2.3 Extension of the present tense into past time territory 130
  - 4.2.4 Future time reference in main clauses: the present futurate 131
  - 4.2.5 Deictic future time in subordinate clauses 134
  - 4.2.6 Future interpretation of a non-deictic present tense 136
- 4.3 The preterite, as used to express anteriority 136
  - 4.3.1 Past time reference 137
  - 4.3.2 Past time reference in combination with politeness/diffidence 138
  - 4.3.3 The past futurate 138
  - 4.3.4 Non-deictic anteriority 139
- 5 Perfect tense 139
- 5.1 The perfect as a non-deictic past tense 140
- 5.2 Complex anteriority: continuative and non-continuative perfects 141
- 5.3 Present perfect vs the simple preterite 142
  - 5.3.1 Present perfect as a compound tense 142
  - 5.3.2 The experiential perfect 143
  - 5.3.3 The resultative perfect 145
  - 5.3.4 The perfect of recent past 145
- 5.4 Non-present perfects 146
- 5.5 Omissibility of the perfect 147
- 5.6 Scope of the perfect 147
- 6 Further uses of the past tenses 148
- 6.1 Modal remoteness 148
- 6.2 The backshifted preterite 151
  - 6.2.1 Backshifted preterite vs ordinary preterite 151
  - 6.2.2 Obligatory vs optional backshifting 155
- 6.3 Primary vs secondary past tense 159
- 7 Temporal interpretation of constructions without primary tense 159
- 8 Progressive aspect 162
- 8.1 Progressive aspectuality 162
- 8.2 Some verb classes 168
- 8.3 Non-aspectual uses of the progressive 171
- 9 Mood and modality 172
- 9.1 Modality and its expression 172
- 9.2 Dimensions of modality 175
  - 9.2.1 Strength of modality 175
  - 9.2.2 Kind of modality 177
  - 9.2.3 Degree of modality and modal harmony 179
- 9.3 Necessity and possibility: must, need, may, and can 180
  - 9.3.1 Epistemic necessity and possibility 180
  - 9.3.2 Deontic necessity and possibility 182
  - 9.3.3 Dynamic necessity and possibility 184

- 9.4 Idiomatic should, and ought 186
  - 9.4.1 Medium strength modality 186
  - 9.4.2 Low-degree modality 187
- 9.5 Will 188
  - 9.5.1 Epistemic modality, including futurity 188
  - 9.5.2 Dynamic modality 192
  - 9.5.3 Deontic modality 194
- 9.6 Shall 194
  - 9.6.1 Deontic modality 194
  - 9.6.2 Non-deontic uses and the choice between shall and will 195
- 9.7 Had better and auxiliary dare 196
- 9.8 The preterite forms could, might, would, should 196
  - 9.8.1 Past time 196
  - 9.8.2 Backshift 198
  - 9.8.3 Modal remoteness 198
  - 9.8.4 The status of should and might as preterites 202
- 9.9 Modal auxiliaries and the scope of the perfect 203
- 9.10 Modal auxiliaries in negative and interrogative clauses 204
- 9.11 Lexical modals, have (got), and quasi-modal be 205
- 10 Future time 208
  - 10.1 The lack of a future tense in English 208
  - 10.2 Idiomatic be going 210