Tracy

Mark: So, what are you doing these days?

Tracy: I'm a dog trainer.

Mark: You mean for a circus or something?

Tracy: Well, close. My dogs are really actors – you know, the dogs you see in movies and TV shows and stuff.

Mark: Cool! How do you do it?

Tracy: Well, you mainly need patience. The dogs have to learn signals for certain basic instructions, like sit, stop, and lie down. After that, you teach them the tricky things. Then the director usually has some special requests.

Mark: But how do you make them learn stuff?

Tracy: You repeat and repeat the commands. And they get a reward every time they get it right.

Mark: I guess you've had a few dog bites.

Tracy: Oh, yeah.

Mark: Have you taught any famous dogs?

Tracy: Quite a few.

Amanda

Amanda: Just taste the difference quality makes!

Woman: Amanda, was that you?

Amanda: Yeah! My first voice-over.

Woman: Your first what?

Amanda: Voice-over. That's what they call it when you're the announcer for a commercial.

Woman: Amazing! So, how did you get that job?

Amanda: Well, I went to a studio and made a demo.

You record a bunch of fake commercials using different voice styles. Then your agent takes the demo to different ad agencies. Hopefully, one of them chooses you.

Woman: Umm. Can you make a lot of money?

Amanda: It depends on how often they play the commercial. And how famous you are.
