Introduction Review the work of Jorge Amado in the thanatological hermeneutics makes it come to be apparent the role of art in shaping the popular imagination and its educational purpose, which art cannot do without.

Objective The purpose of this research is to present that, Jorge Amado using various methods causes a semiotic and polysemic reading of life and a hermeneutics review of death, making his literary art an instrument of education for death.

Methods Using the transversal method of bibliography review of the author's work.

Results We noted that in the anthropology of Jorge Amado, death might be the exercise of power, as those legitimated by a theology casuistry, in “Violent Land”. However, death can be an element of transformation of the state of life and overcoming the limits of the roles that society has agreed to be played by its subject, paradigm of this counterculture is Livia, widow of Guma in “Sea of Death”. In “The Double Death of Quinhas Water-Bray” dead and death inset in starring roles, provoking a psychological reflection about death as a complex dimension, able to have their own intentions and itinerary and, assigning the dead freedom and responsibility for his death and die, the author will say: “Everyone take care of your own funeral.”

Conclusion Death has the function of unveiling character and affections, and balance all forces present in the society, and the art is the instrument to that reflection reach the community.

Disclosure of interest The authors have not supplied their declaration of competing interest.

http://dx.doi.org/10.1016/j.eurpsy.2017.01.664

EV0335

Political and religious violence: What psychiatry can bring to Middle East?

F.D. Gandus

Former Researcher at La Sorbonne University, Philosophy and Human Sciences Research, Kyriat Arba, Israel

Middle East is one of the most violent regions of the world. This phenomenon is most often due to the fact that religious problematic and political challenges are immediately mixed in places where, moreover, the states don’t assume their role as expected about structuring their societies, supporting freedom and respect for the individual rights and life-projects of their citizens. This complex configuration makes a lot of populations in Middle East develop discreet but serious mental problems such as schizophrenia with paranoia-tendencies or loss of rationality among other possibilities. The aim of this lecture (if still possible) or poster (if the program itinerary and, assigning the dead freedom and responsibility for his death and die, the author will say: “Everyone take care of your own funeral.”

Disclosure of interest The author has not supplied his declaration of competing interest.

http://dx.doi.org/10.1016/j.eurpsy.2017.01.665

EV0336

Does psychiatry link culture and symptoms?

L. Garcia Ayala∗, M. Gomez Revuelta∗, C. Martin Requena2, B. Gonzalez Hernandez2, M. Laborde Zufiaurre2, E. Saez de Adana Garcia de Acuña2, A. Aranzabal Itoiz2, O. Porta Olivares3, M. Juncal Ruiz1, M. Zubia Martin1, N. Nuñez Morales2, A.M. Gonzalez-Pinto Arrillaga1, M.P. López Peña1

1 Osakidetza, Psychiatry, Salvatierra-Agraurin, Spain

2 Osakidetza, Psychiatry, Vitoria, Spain

3 Marqués de Valdecilla, Psychiatry, Santander, Spain

Disclosure of interest The authors have not supplied their declaration of competing interest.

Keywords Transcultural; Diagnosis.

Introduction Transcultural psychiatry is a branch of psychiatry where cultural context for psychiatric symptoms is studied. It emerged as a consequence of migration of diverse ethnic groups and questions whether international diagnosis classifications fit in different cultures.

Objectives The aim of this review is to make professionals aware of the importance of cultural context for the way mental disorders present themselves depending on the patient’s origin.

Materials and methods We report the detailed case of a 23-year-old Moroccan woman, attended for the first time by the mental health services when she was 8. Since that moment, she felt herself possessed by a strange being. Auditory hallucinations appeared. It was only when her father or her husband were at home that she felt the “being” was gone. Her husband, as formerly his father, represented a symbol of protection against that evil being and indeed against her mental disorder, which was directly related to her cultural beliefs.

Discussion Every country has a different culture and every migration brings with it a new environment. The way people adapt to it may result in mental illness. We want to discuss if symptoms fit international diagnosis classifications.

Conclusion Psychiatrists should become aware of the limitations of the international classifications when used on different ethnic groups. We should have a cultural approach in order to treat the diverse populations from all around the world.

http://dx.doi.org/10.1016/j.eurpsy.2017.01.666

EV0337

Quixotic delirium, around the fourth centenary of the publication of the second part of Don Quixote de la Mancha: About a case

G. Hernandez Santillan∗, I. Mirapeix Bedia

Hospital Universitario Príncipe de Asturias, Psychiatry, Alcalá de Henares, Spain

Disclosure of interest The authors have not supplied their declaration of competing interest.

Keywords Transcultural; Diagnosis.

Introduction Transcultural psychiatry is a branch of psychiatry where cultural context for psychiatric symptoms is studied. It emerged as a consequence of migration of diverse ethnic groups and questions whether international diagnosis classifications fit in different cultures.

Objectives The aim of this review is to make professionals aware of the importance of cultural context for the way mental disorders present themselves depending on the patient’s origin.

Materials and methods We report the detailed case of a 23-year-old Moroccan woman, attended for the first time by the mental health services when she was 8. Since that moment, she felt herself possessed by a strange being. Auditory hallucinations appeared. It was only when her father or her husband were at home that she felt the “being” was gone. Her husband, as formerly his father, represented a symbol of protection against that evil being and indeed against her mental disorder, which was directly related to her cultural beliefs.

Discussion Every country has a different culture and every migration brings with it a new environment. The way people adapt to it may result in mental illness. We want to discuss if symptoms fit international diagnosis classifications.

Conclusion Psychiatrists should become aware of the limitations of the international classifications when used on different ethnic groups. We should have a cultural approach in order to treat the diverse populations from all around the world.

Keywords Transcultural; Diagnosis.

Disclosure of interest The authors have not supplied their declaration of competing interest.

http://dx.doi.org/10.1016/j.eurpsy.2017.01.665