'Recommended without hesitation . . . he has thrown his net wide, ranging from Charles II to President Roosevelt.'

Dr W. A. R. Thomson, Financial Times

'The author has been careful in ascertaining the facts, has often looked at original sources, and, like a good surgeon, usually comes to a definite diagnosis on the nature of the illnesses. He is frank in his comments on the medical attendants.'

The Journal of JAMES YONGE, PLYMOUTH SURGEON (1647-1721)

James Yonge began his medical career at the age of eleven, as a surgeon-apprentice in the navy. His work took him to places as far apart as Newfoundland and Holland, and to many parts of England. His journal is a lively record of his impressions and experiences, combining everyday incidents, such as a wedding party, a cold winter journey, or the death of a patient, with events of real historical interest, such as his experiences in a Dutch prison, his visit to London just after the Great Fire, and his unique account of the viva voce examination at the College of Physicians. By the time he ended his journal he was one of the best-known surgeons in England, specialising in amputations and in the cure of fistulas (fee 50 shillings each!) 35s net.
