Condemned to Repetition

The United States and Nicaragua

Robert A. Pastor

Here is an insider's account of U.S. policy making toward Nicaragua, written by a major participant. Robert Pastor was Director of Latin American Affairs on the National Security Council from 1977 to 1981, a crucial period in U.S.-Nicaragua relations. He presents a wealth of original material from his own experience, classified government documents, and interviews with nearly 100 leaders from the United States, Nicaragua, and throughout Latin America. What emerges is a picture of the United States and an entire region haunted by the spectre of Cuba and yet "condemned to repetition."

Deadly Paradigms

The Failure of U.S. Counterinsurgency Policy

D. Michael Schafer

Michael Shafer argues that American policymakers have consistently and fundamentally misperceived the political context of revolutionary wars directed against American clients, and that because American attempts at counterinsurgency have been based on flawed premises, these efforts have failed in virtually every instance.

At fault is a pervasive, compelling, but distorted vision of Third World states as beleaguered modernizers and the United States as manager of modernization. This vision has obscured critical distinctions among threatened governments. As a result, counterinsurgency involvements have been undertaken blind, without a clear measure of the prospects for victory in any given case.

Rethinking Military Politics

Brazil and the Southern Cone

Alfred Stepan

The last four years have seen a remarkable resurgence of democracy in the Southern Cone of the Americas. Military regimes have been replaced in Argentina, Uruguay, and Brazil. Despite great interest in these new democracies, the role of the military in the process of transition has been under-theorized and under-researched. Here one of the best-known analysts of the military in politics examines the reasons for this neglect and takes a new look at the state, the breakdown of democracy, and the military.
