The Political Science Major

The Association begins a study of the undergraduate major in political science in 1989. The study is to be a two-year effort under the direction of the Association of American Colleges. At least 11 other scholarly disciplines are participating in this project—entitled "Liberal Education, Study in Depth and the Arts and Science Major." Funding is being provided by the Fund for the Improvement of Post Secondary Education and The Ford Foundation.

A Task Force, appointed by Association President Lucian W. Pye, will examine the political science major. Task Force members are: John C. Wahlke, University of Arizona, chair; Twiley W. Barker, Jr., University of Illinois, Chicago; Lawrence W. Beer, Lafayette College; Mary Ellen Fischer, Skidmore College; Ronald Kahn, Oberlin College; Kathleen McGinnis, Trinity College; Marian L. Palley, University of Delaware; and Randall B. Ripley, Ohio State University. Serving on the Task Force, as ex-officio members in order to assure coordination with the Association's continuing programs, are: Richard Brody, Stanford University, chair, Education Committee; and Lois B. Moreland, Spelman College, chair, Departmental Services Committee.

The Task Force will examine existing practices for designing a major in political science in terms of credit hours, required courses, course sequences, proscribed areas of concentration, and the distribution across subfields. In doing so, the Task Force will address the objectives sought by a "study in depth" of political science and how these are pursued by departments of differing sizes and in different types of universities and colleges.

The Task Force will have some data from a survey of deans and department chairs organized by the AAC for the project. At the same time, the Task Force invites submissions from political science departments on the philosophy and structure of the major, and from individuals who have studied the major in political science. All of this information will be the basis of a report from the Task Force that will not only review current practices but recommend developments to strengthen the undergraduate major.

If anyone notices an omission in the newly published Directory of Black Americans in Political Science, the Association would appreciate being informed. Please contact Maurice Woodard at APSA.
