EDITORIAL POLICY

Language in Society is concerned with all branches of the study of speech and language as aspects of social life. Preference is given to contributions of general theoretical or methodological interest. Contributions may vary from predominantly linguistic to predominantly social in content, but are expected to involve both poles of the journal's field of concern in some explicit way. The journal seeks to aid in strengthening international scholarship and cooperation in this field, and from time to time will carry a set of articles reflecting the state and interest of sociolinguistic research in a specific country or region. In addition to original articles, the journal publishes reviews of current books, brief accounts of work in progress, and notes and comments on points arising out of recent publications.

Language Variation and Change

EDITORS:

Anthony Kroch, Univ. of Pennsylvania
William Labov, Univ. of Pennsylvania
David Sankoff, Univ. of Montreal

Language Variation and Change will be the only journal dedicated to the quantitative analysis of linguistic variation in speech and writing. It will bring together synchronic and diachronic linguistics by examining the necessary link between language change in progress and contemporary variation within the speech community. Papers will focus on topics such as linguistic structure in actual speech or writing, mother-tongue or language of choice, language as an index of social relationships and structure, language policy and planning, ethnography of speaking, and the study of speech acts and conversational roles.
