

Let the familiar become exotic . . .

"The Claremont Review is one of those few places where the problems of statesmanship and political philosophy are faced with seriousness, knowledge, and depth. When I receive it in Paris, I am sure to have something of value to ponder."

— Pierre Manet
Editor-in-Chief of Commentaire

Recent articles: Harry V. Jaffa and Thomas Pangle on "The Legacy of Leo Strauss," John A. Wettengreen on the ideology of the AIDS debate, Emil Fackenheim on modern Judaism, Jack Kemp on entrepreneurship, and Jean-Marie Benoist on "How Democracies Survive." The courts, military strategy, and significant books in political philosophy are all treated in recent issues. You won't find arguments like these anywhere else. And our other readers, such as Edward Banfield, Herman Belz, Hilail Gildin, and Irving Kristol would agree.

(And of course we include literary essays as well—on Garrison Keillor, Wodehouse, Joyce, Faulkner, Melville, and Shakespeare—not to mention reflections on religion, culture, and the classics.)

Give us a try: Special introductory subscription rate of $10 a year for four issues; $18 for two years; overseas subscribers please add $5 per year. All subscribers are placed on the mailing list of the Review's publisher, The Claremont Institute for the Study of Statesmanship and Political Philosophy. Send your check to:

The Claremont Review
4650 Arrow Highway, Suite D-7
Montclair, California 91763