This invaluable almost daily wartime account of Sir Earle Page’s eight-month mission to London provides crucial insights into Anglo-Australian, Anglo-Dominion and United States–Australian wartime relations during a crucial phase of the Second World War. It offers an intriguing understanding into the man himself: his own thoughts about Australia during the war; his hopes for its future after the war; and the personal relations Page had with leading political figures, military officials, and policy-makers of the day. The diary revolves around a number of interrelated themes: the battles to represent Australia in the British War Cabinet and to secure a larger share for Australia of lucrative wartime food contracts; and the future of Anglo-Australian relations in the Pacific as the United States asserted its dominance over its British ally. The ill-fated defence of Malaya/Singapore and the stunning collapse of British prestige at the hands of the Japanese between December 1941 and May 1942 serves as a backcloth to Page’s mission and its evolving significance.

KENT FEDOROWICH is Reader in British Imperial and Commonwealth History at the University of the West of England, Bristol. His research covers the fields of empire migration, prisoners of war, civilian internment, Anglo-Dominion relations, and the British World. He has published widely on these subjects in learned journals and scholarly collections of essays. Among his publications are (with Bob Moore) The British Empire and its Italian Prisoners of War, 1940–1947 (2002) and (edited with Andrew S. Thompson) Empire, Migration and Identity in the British World (2013). In September 2020 he was appointed a Research Fellow in the Department of Military History, School for Security and Africa, Faculty of Military Science, at Stellenbosch University (South Africa).

JAYNE GIFFORD is a Lecturer in Modern History at the University of East Anglia. Her research interests focus upon imperial governance and networks of the British Empire. Her publications include Britain in Egypt: Egyptian Nationalism and Imperial Strategy, 1919–1931 (2019). She is currently working on a biography of John Loader Maffey whose imperial career included the North-West Frontier of India, the Sudan, and Ireland.

Cover illustration: John Frith (1906–2000): The Bulletin, 17 September 1941. ‘If you took more of our surplus primary produce in your ration you’d be as sound as a bell’

Permission to publish courtesy of the copyright holder, John Frith’s son, Jeffrey Frith (Canberra).