Maudsley wins major MRC research centre

The Medical Research Council (MRC) has chosen the Institute of Psychiatry at the Maudsley Hospital for a major new research centre in psychiatry. With initial research funding of £2.6 million, it will be named the MRC Centre for Social, Genetic and Developmental Psychiatry. Its first director will be Professor Sir Michael Rutter who is also Director of the MRC Child Psychiatry Unit.

Reversing the brain drain from Britain, the announcement coincides with the recruitment of two leading scientists from the United States, Robert Plomin and Judy Dunn, who specialise respectively in behavioural genetics and social development.

Robert Plomin's research combines genetic and environmental approaches to investigate how they interact in the development of behavioural dimensions and disorders; for example, he has pioneered research on the genetic and environmental factors for making children growing up in the same family so different from one another. Judy Dunn's plans for research at the new centre include a study of how children cope with important changes in their lives such as new schools or changes in the family structure; and a study of the development of children who are brought up by step-parents.

New publications

St George's Mental Health Library publishes The Sovereign Series, books which explain the difficult things of life to adults with learning disabilities and to help carers to talk about sensitive topics.
