LETTER

October 25, 1975

Dear Dr. Duffy,

I am a Chilean national who spent one year and a half teaching political science to undergraduates at Ahmadu Bello University (Northern Nigeria).

I have come back to Latin America highly motivated to study relationships between this continent and Africa. I have brought with me four sets of data:

- a data bank of interactions between Nigeria, Ivory Coast, Ghana and Senegal and the rest of the world (1954-74) —a total of 40,000 computer cards of events data.
- a questionnaire passed to 160 expatriate staffs working at ABU in 1975.
- a questionnaire passed to 250 students from ABU and Lagos University.
- data of Nigeria's foreign trade.

Working now in the analysis of these data I have found an important lack of background information in our libraries. I would very much appreciate if you could help me in these ways:

- put me in touch with people who might have similar interests.
- inform me about ASA, possibilities of presenting papers, and grants available for research and travel.

If you need to know something about Latin America, please let me know. Thank you in advance.

THE AMERICAN PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY each year makes small grants-in-aid for basic research in all fields of learning. These grants are made to persons holding a doctoral degree or having equivalent scientific or scholarly experience. The grants are intended to assist investigators by providing for some costs of research work, such as the collection of scientific and literary materials; preparation of photographs, microfilms, and other records; purchase of special supplies; necessary travel; and other incidental expenses of research. The Society does not undertake to provide the full cost or subsistence during travel; the usual allowance is $10.00 per day. No grants larger than $2,000 are now made; most grants are smaller, the average about $800. Grants to active full professors do not exceed $1,000. No more than two grants are made to any one person in a given five-year period.

The Committee on Research meets on the first Fridays of February, April, June, October, and December. The deadline for applications is eight weeks before each meeting. Those who wish to determine their eligibility for a grant should write informally to George W. Corner, Executive Officer, The American Philosophical Society, 104 South Fifth Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19106, briefly outlining their proposal.
