APSA would also like to recognize the numerous professors who have continued to support this program by consistently identifying gifted students who go on to study political science at the graduate level, especially Elliott Slotnick of Ohio State University who has served as Chair of the MID Steering Committee for the past two years.

The American Political Science Association is grateful for the generous support of these core schools and individuals. The Minority Identification Project benefits not only the students identified in the project, but also the profession.

Regional Journals Join JSTOR Project

Continuing efforts to build a comprehensive electronic archive of important scholarly works, the journals of the Midwestern, Southern, and Western Political Science Associations will soon be available through JSTOR, the Journal Storage Project. Back issues of American Journal of Political Science, Journal of Politics, and Political Science Quarterly will be available on-line in early 1998. Earlier this year, the entire back catalog of the American Political Science Review was made available on-line through JSTOR.

Begun by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation in 1990 as a pilot project to “help the scholarly community take advantage of advances in information technologies,” JSTOR now provides full texts of the complete available catalogs of over 30 scholarly journals. At the end of its planned first phase, nearly 100 journals will be available, including 8–10 political science titles. Currently, scholars at 195 participating colleges and universities and over a dozen foundations and research centers have access to JSTOR. Subscription for individuals will be available in the near future. Encourage your university library to join.

A fuller description of JSTOR and a searchable demonstration database are available on-line at <http://www.jstor.org/>.

Nominations Sought for 1998 APSA Book Awards

Nominations are invited for APSA Book Awards to be presented at the 1998 Annual Meeting, September 3-6, in Boston. Nominations Sought for 1998 APSA Career and Dissertation Awards

Nominations are invited for APSA Career and Dissertation Awards to be presented at the 1998 Annual Meeting, September 3-6, in Boston, Massachusetts.

Departments are invited to submit nominations for dissertation prizes, although not more than one per award. Dissertations eligible are those completed and accepted during the past two calendar years. Department submissions should be sent to each member of the award committee and include a letter of nomination and a copy of the dissertation. Departments must submit their nominations by January 15, 1998.

Individuals are also invited to submit, for consideration, letters of nomination for APSA-sponsored Career Awards. Career Awards are decided upon by three-member committees appointed by the president and approved by the Council. The deadline for submission of letters is February 1, 1998.

Dissertation Prizes

Gabriel A. Almond Award - comparative politics.

William Anderson Award - federalism and intergovernmental relations.

Edward S. Corwin Award - public law.

Harold D. Lasswell Award - policy studies.

Helen Dwight Reid Award - international relations, law and politics.

E.E. Schattschneider Award - American government.

Leo Strauss Award - political philosophy.

Leonard D. White Award - public administration.

Career Awards

John Gaus Award and Lectureship - to honor a recipient's lifetime of exemplary scholarship in the joint tradition of political science and public administration and more generally, recognizes achievement and encourages scholarship in public administration.

Ithiel de Sola Pool Lectureship - Given to a scholar selected to present a lecture exploring the implications of research on issues of politics in a global society and evoking the broad range of scholarship pursued by Ithiel de Sola Pool.

Hubert H. Humphrey Award - in recognition of notable public service by a political scientist.

Carey McWilliams Award - to honor a major journalistic contribution to our understanding of politics.

USIA Summer Institute Participants Visit APSA

Throughout the summer the APSA welcomed several groups of international scholars participating in U.S. Information Agency-sponsored Summer Institutes to the national office. As part of their programs in Washington, D.C., groups from the University of Michigan and Southern Illinois University met with APSA staff members to learn more about the Association and its mission. Led by APSA's Director of Educational Affairs, Sheilah Mann, and joined by Executive Director Catherine Rudder and Deputy Director Robert Hauck, the visiting scholars were briefed on Association activities in the United States and around the world. Discussion topics included the role of the Association in the discipline and enabled a mutual exchange of ideas about civics education and teaching. Members of the visiting groups were also given complimentary APSA memberships to allow them to follow the Association's activities.

What follows are summary articles on each Institute, prepared by Bear F. Braumoeller, University of Michigan, and John L. Foster, Southern Illinois University, respectively.

University of Michigan Summer Institute in American Foreign Policy

The United States Information Agency (USIA) sponsors a yearly summer program in American foreign policy. For the past two years, the program has been based at the University of Michigan.

The participants, who range in experience from lecturers to department heads, represent a wide range of countries—in two years, 32 countries have been represented—and bring with them a diverse array of experiences and perspectives.

Participants meet at the Center for Political Studies at the Institute for Social Research to take part in daily seminars as well as in occasional special events, such as teleconferences and presentations by visiting scholars. The program administrator and Director of CPS, Professor William Zimmerman, designs the program content to incorporate insights from the subfields of American politics, comparative politics, and international relations.

In addition to its academic regimen, the program offers social activities, such as a trip to see the (now) world-famous Toledo Mud Hens. Participants also take a field trip to Chicago, where they experience the intellectual life at the University of Chicago and the social life of the city.

The program concludes with one week in Washington, D.C. Among the scholars and policymakers with whom the participants met in Washington were Richard Haass, Director of Foreign Policy Studies at the Brookings Institution, former Assistant Secretary of State Arnold Kanter, Professor James Rosenau of George Washington University, former American Ambassador to Latvia Ints Silins, and Richard Solomon, Director of the United States Institute for Peace.

Summer Institute on the U.S. Political System

The 1997 USIA Summer Institute in the American Political System, held from June 27 to August 9, 1997, was the fourth on the campus of Southern Illinois University at Carbondale. Each participant in the 1997 SIUC institute has responsibility for university-level courses on American government, politics and history in their home country, but had little or no previous direct exposure to the United States. Five of the 1997 participants came from Latin American nations, three from Africa, six from Asia, three from the former Soviet Union or Soviet bloc, and one from Western Europe.

The broad goal of this institute—as of the previous three—was to provide the participants with as thorough an immersion in American government, politics, and political culture as possible. The central organizing theme of the 1997 institute was the American federal system with its rather unique division of governmental responsibility across national, state, and local units of government. A secondary theme was to compare and contrast the Ameri-
