Heart trauma is a severe form of thoracic trauma with an incidence of 7–14%. Heart trauma can be either open or blunt, with the latter more prevalent during a disaster. Possible open heart injuries include: (1) pericardial injuries; (2) superficial myocardial and coronary vessels injuries; and (3) penetrating cardiac wounds. The variants of blunt heart trauma include: (1) heart concussion and contusion; (2) rupture of the heart wall and...