Twentieth-Century Music disseminates research on a broad spectrum of scholarly interest in the long twentieth century. We welcome submissions on all kinds of musical practice, including folk and popular music, media and film music, as well as art music and sound art. We also encourage submissions from a similarly wide variety of methodological and disciplinary perspectives, including ethnomusicology, archival research, cultural studies, and analytical work which engages with broad historical arguments. The reviews section offers agenda-setting responses to newly published work.
