CONTRIBUTORS

Leland Conley Barrows is an Associate Professor of African History at Voorhees College, Denmark, South Carolina. He has contributed several articles on francophone African subjects to scholarly journals both in the United States and in France. He is currently preparing a monograph on the subject of General Faidherbe and French expansion in Senegal.

William E. Cole is Professor of Economics at the University of Tennessee. A specialist in economic development, he has published several works dealing with Latin America and has served with several United Nations missions to East Africa.

Svend E. Holsoe is an Associate Professor of Anthropology at the University of Delaware. His research has concentrated on ethnohistorical problems in western Africa with a particular emphasis on Liberia, Sierra Leone and the Republic of Guinea. His most recent work has focused on the dynamic nature of Vai social organization in Liberia.

L. Adele Jinadu is a Lecturer in Political Science at the University of Lagos. His research interests center on contemporary Political Thought, the Politics of Developing Areas and International Relations Theory. He is currently engaged in a study of the idea of culture in African Political Thought and (with Dr. Emmanuel Hansen of the University of Ghana) is co-editing a collection of critical essays on Fanon.

Joseph J. Lauer recently completed his Ph.D. dissertation in history which was a study of economic innovations among the Doo of western Ivory Coast. He is currently at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Stephen D. McLaughlin is a Center Fellow in the Center for International Education at the University of Massachusetts. He is currently in Ghana doing field research on the effects of different kinds of educational experience on the problem-solving abilities of people in a rural West African context.

Richard D. Sanders is Associate Professor of Statistics at the University of Tennessee. He has engaged in considerable research in Latin America and has written on development problems in general and those of Mexico in particular.

Timothy M. Shaw is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Dalhousie University, Nova Scotia, Canada, associated with its Centres for African Studies and for Foreign Policy Studies. He has taught at Makerere University, Kampala, Uganda, and at the University of Zambia, Lusaka. His articles on the international and development politics of African states have appeared in several collections and journals, including Africa Today, Canadian Journal of African Studies, International Journal, International Perspectives, Issue, and Journal of Modern African Studies.

William F. Steel is an Associate Professor of Economics at Vanderbilt University. A specialist in African economic development and industrialization, he is currently writing a book called Urban Employment and Small-Scale Enterprises in Developing Countries: Evidence from Ghana (to be published by Praeger).

Robert W. Strayer is an Associate Professor of History at the State University College, Brockport, New York. His research interests are generally in East African colonial history with particular emphasis on the interaction of missions and African societies. He has also written Kenya: Focus on Nationalism (Prentice-Hall, 1975) for a secondary school audience.

Richard Vengroff is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at Texas Tech University. Author of Botswana: Rural Development in the Shadow of Apartheid (Associated University Presses, 1976), his current research focuses on an empirical approach to the study of neo-colonialism.
