Oliver Cromwell
Peter Gaunt
144 pages | 50 color and b&w illus. | $22.00 cloth

A military genius, Oliver Cromwell (1599-1658) played a crucial role both in crushing the monarchy in England and Wales and in establishing English republican control over Ireland and Scotland.

This illustrated biography provides a concise and accessible introduction to Cromwell’s life and career. The text draws upon extensive and up-to-date research as well as contemporary speeches and letters, both personal and political, giving an insight into the hopes and fears, goals and aspirations of the man behind one of the most critical periods of British history.

Sir Francis Drake
Peter Whitfield
160 pages | 58 color and b&w illus. | $22.00 cloth

Sir Francis Drake (1540-1596) assured his place in history when he sailed the Pacific to become the first Englishman to circumnavigate the globe. Drake the man, however, is an enigma and relatively little is known about his personal life.

In this new biography, Peter Whitfield, a leading expert in exploration and map history, sheds light on Drake the man and the legend. Illustrated throughout with original documents, maps and portraits, this biography offers an accessible and highly readable account of one of the greatest explorers of all time.

Our Shadowed Present
Modernism, Postmodernism, and History
J. C. D. CLARK

"Clark's book promises to be the most exciting book about the subject I teach published in many years, a critique at once of modernist materialism and the 'ultra-idealism' of the postmodernists. No one thinks more deeply about history."
—Niall Ferguson, Daily Telegraph

"Jonathan Clark is one of the cleverest and certainly one of the most combative historians on his generation... In this new book, Clark offers a subtle and devastating critique of [the] latest trends in Anglo-American intellectual fashion. . . . This is a masterly book: persuasively argued, astutely observed, the product of one of the brightest historical minds on either side of the Atlantic."
—John Adamson, Sunday Telegraph

"This is a wonderfully thought-provoking book, by an immensely distinguished historian."
—Michael Burleigh, Literary Review

This important and stimulating volume seeks to defend the value of historical understanding in the face of social-scientific and especially postmodernist criticisms of historical method and the usefulness of history for understanding the present. Clark argues that modernism and postmodernism can both be explained historically; that we cannot emancipate ourselves from the past; that historical identities are deeply rooted; and that the interplay of ideas in the public arena frequently disguises these truths, but does not abolish them.

Humoring the Body
Emotions and the Shakespearean Stage
GAIL KERN PASTER

"Instead of an inner being set apart from its outer world by boundaries of flesh and thus incubating a particular subjectivity, Paster describes an inner self contiguous with the world it inhabits, a being blown from within and without by the winds of passion and by mud and burnt choler, a creature who shares a great deal with other animals that inhabit early modern England."
—Barbara Howard Traister, author of The Notorious Astrological Physician of London

Shakespeare’s Tribe
Church, Nation, and Theater in Renaissance England
JEFFREY KNAPP

"The fact that this reads so refreshingly and bravely says a lot about current pieties within the academy. When addressing the Renaissance, present-day critics have a tendency—even a need—to explain religious language and themes entirely in terms of politics. . . . By arguing that dramatic subversiveness can be a cover for religion, Knapp manages to have his sugared pill and eat it. . . . As a marvelously stimulating book from a subtle critic, Shakespeare’s Tribe is likely to prompt many suggestions for further research. In his ability go back to source and say radical things in a friendly spirit, Jeffrey Knapp is rather Erasmian himself."—Alison Shell, Times Literary Supplement
