COVER PHOTO

Aerial view showing the Antarctic base Bernardo O'Higgins on the island Isabel Riquelme at the northern tip of the Antarctic Peninsula. Red buildings mark Chilean facilities while the 9 m radio telescope and the white containers represent the German Antarctic Receiving Station O'Higgins. It serves as a satellite ground station for payload data downlink and telecommanding of remote sensing satellites, and as a geodetic observatory for global reference systems and global change. See the paper by Thomas Klügel and others in the current issue.
