The first Seligman Crystal, awarded to Gerald Seligman on 2 May 1963

The first Seligman Crystal, shown above, is a hexagonal prism of Swedish crystal glass mounted on a wooden base and inscribed: SELIGMAN CRYSTAL—GLACIOLOGICAL SOCIETY—G. SELIGMAN—1963. A snow crystal design is etched on the top sloping face and a profile of Mr. Seligman is etched on the front face.

In making the presentation, Sir Vivian Fuchs, the Chairman of Council, referred to Mr. Seligman as the “founder and father of the Society” and expressed the Society’s appreciation of all that he had done in fostering the interests of the Society and its journal.

In his reply, Mr. Seligman said that it was difficult to return adequate thanks for the beautiful award, and that he felt deeply moved by the generous recognition of his services to the Society and to the science of glaciology, services which could never have been accomplished without the co-operation, active help and encouragement from friends in the United Kingdom and abroad.

Members of the Glaciological Society who attended an informal dinner later the same evening were able to examine the Crystal and drink a toast to Mr. Seligman.
