The Contributors

Owen Coggins is a scholar of ambiguity, noise and religion in popular music cultures. In addition to a range of articles on popular music, particularly on extreme metal and noise, a monograph Mysticism, Ritual and Religion in Drone Metal was published by Bloomsbury Academic in 2018. Owen is currently Honorary Associate of the Religious Studies Department at The Open University, and Researcher at Nordoff Robbins Music Therapy.

Michail Exarchos (A.K.A. Stereo Mike) is a hip-hop musicologist and award-winning rap artist (MTV Best Greek Act), with nominations for multiple VMAs and an MTV Europe Music Award. He is a senior lecturer in Music Technology at London College of Music, and his publications include articles for Routledge, Cambridge Scholars and the Journal of Popular Music Education. His self-produced album Xli3h has been included in the 30 Best Greek Hip-Hop albums of all time.

Zachary Loeffler received his PhD in Music History and Theory in 2018 from the University of Chicago, where he is presently a Postdoctoral Teaching Fellow in the Division of the Humanities. He teaches music and philosophy courses, and his current work explores the emergence of magic as a dominant concept of music in globally mediated culture.

Pedro Silva Marra is professor at the Department of Communications and Media at Espírito Santo Federal University (UFES). He leads the research group Ateliê de Sonoridades Urbanas. Marra is author of several papers and book chapters on topics such as popular music, urban culture, sports and their relations with sonorities.

Erin Sweeney Smith is an independent scholar who works in the library world and received her PhD in Musicology from Case Western Reserve University. Her scholarly work revolves around investigating the role of women in popular music from the turn of the 20th century to the present. Her previous publications include an article for Popular Music and an essay in McFarland Press’ Rammstein on Fire: New Perspectives on the Music and Performances.

Darci Sprengel is currently a PhD student in the UCLA Department of Ethnomusicology. She received a BMA in viola performance and BA in Middle Eastern studies from the University of Michigan in 2010. From 2010 to 2011 she spent a year working with musicians in Egypt and studying Arabic at the University of Alexandria. Her current interests include new music from the Middle East, community art projects, sound in urban spaces, and gender and feminist studies. She is the reviews editor of Ethnomusicology Review.

Felipe Trotta is Associate Professor at Universidade Federal Fluminense and researcher of National Council of Research (CNPq). He is author of several papers... and articles about music and society and the books O samba e suas fronteiras (UFRJ, 2011) and No Ceará não tem disso não (Folio Digital, 2014), and co-editor of Made in Brazil: Studies in Popular Music (Routledge, 2015).

Barbara Lebrun is Senior Lecturer in French Cultural Studies at the University of Manchester (UK). Since her first monograph Protest Music in France (Ashgate, 2009), she has published widely in the area of contemporary French popular music. Her edited volumes include Chanson et Performance (L’Harmattan, 2012) and, with Catherine Strong, Death and the Rock Star (Ashgate, 2015).

Nanette de Jong is senior lecturer at the International Centre for Music Studies, Newcastle University. Her research examines the identities forged by African diasporic groups, emphasizing the ways in which these identities find expression in popular music. She has published on avant-garde jazz and Caribbean music in such journals as Latin American Music Review, Afro-Hispanic Review, Jazzforschung/Jazz Research, and Black Music Research Journal. Her book, Tambú: Curacao’s African-Caribbean Ritual and the Politics of Memory, published by Indiana University Press (2012), was nominated for the Albert J. Raboteau Prize in Africana Religions. She is currently editing the Cambridge Companion to Caribbean Music, with Cambridge University Press (2020).
