adolescent psychiatry. Mr Birchenall drew on his experience as a nurse in mental handicap to discuss similarities between the nursing process objectives and the taxonomy of educational objectives. Dr York-Moore emphasized that there had been a shift in responsibility and accountability towards the nurse, especially because so much of the work with mentally handicapped people now centred on their life outside hospital with relatives or in sheltered accommodation. The development of community units depended very strongly on the mental handicap team of nurses and social workers. A well designed care delivery scheme was needed.

Mr Fox felt that nurses provided the environment for the elderly mentally infirm in which evaluation of patient needs could take place both outside and inside hospital. The care plan should be individual and include a discharge review for those who had been admitted. Documentation was invaluable when there were queries or complaints from relatives.

Miss Teresa Wilkinson drew attention to the value of using some forms of rating scales in assessment and using these to construct a patient profile and a hierarchy of objectives. Clearly it was not always possible to achieve the ideal, and the team might have to settle for limited goals. The important thing was to decide on what was being aimed for in the short and long term and to make a realistic plan.

The papers were followed by a lively, if perhaps predictable, discussion which centred on the general feeling that much of what had been put forward was already taking place but that the ability to document it would depend on staffing levels.

Professor Altschul pointed out that the need to communicate and therefore to document was even greater if there were staff shortages, but many participants felt that in the highly dependent groups such as the elderly mentally ill, the routine tasks were so time consuming as to make these ideas impractical.

Professor Altschul then invited the speakers to sum up their views, and the meeting ended with the overall impression that although psychiatrists and psychiatric nurses may still be struggling to define their individual philosophies and modes of practice, there is no doubt of their mutual esteem and determination to work together in the most effective way for the benefit of patients.
