SURVEY

A JOURNAL OF SOVIET AND EAST EUROPEAN STUDIES

No. 68

July 1968

The current issue contains a section on the conditions of reporting from the Soviet Union by Moscow correspondents, covering the whole period of Soviet history from 1917 to the present day. Contributors to this symposium include the correspondents of the Manchester Guardian, the Christian Science Monitor, the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, the Corriere della Sera, Newsweek and others. Another section deals with current developments in Czechoslovakia and Poland; it includes analysis in depth, eyewitness reports, and documents. Leonard Schapiro writes on Russia since Khrushchev and Alfred Grosser on Franco-Soviet relations. The background and preparations for the international communist meeting in Moscow and its prospects are discussed by Roger Salloch. Daniel Weissbrot describes in an extensive review the unpublished novel by Alexander Solzhenitsyn, The Cancer Ward.

Intelligible Fields in the Social Sciences

by C. A. O. VAN NIEUWENHUIJZE, Institute of Social Studies, The Hague

(= Studies in the Social Sciences, 3). 1967. 285 pp.

Dglds. 36,—/US $10.30/50 F

The essays by Dr. van Nieuwenhuijze collected here concern the object of the social sciences, the nature and scope of theory, theoretical concepts as tools for investigation and explanation. Some of these essays deal with matters of pure theory, such as social sciences disciplines as such, middle range theory and the area concept. Others represent an assessment of specific notions, such as reciprocity, that seem to hold particular significance, whether temporarily as just another fad, or on a more permanent basis. Also, questions are raised about how to achieve theoretically sound dealings, for purposes of research, with matters like entrepreneurship and innovation, or labour ethos. The author probes deeply into matters of social change and development, thus elaborating his theory of society as process.

The present volume is the third in a series of methodological essays, the preceding ones being Society as Process (1962) and Cross-Cultural Studies (1963).

CONTENTS. The quest for the manageable social unit. – The social sciences in the universitas studiorum. – Area studies – unidisciplinary, multidisciplinary, interdisciplinary. – Technological change as a factor in development. – Organization and development. – Work valuation as a factor of prosperity and development. – A conceptual frame of reference for research. – Some thoughts on phenomena of innovation and entrepreneurship and their analysis. – Reciprocity as a social sciences concept.
