Keywords: social policy; welfare state; climate change; risk; citizenship; welfare regimes; wellbeing; erratum

The Publisher apologises for the inclusion of erroneous text on page 6 in the first paragraph.

The sentence:

“To consider this relation more fully and thoughtfully, the classical understandings have been challenged by different forms of ‘green citizenship’ such as environmental and ecological citizenship.”

should be followed by:

“Environmental citizenship challenges the established Marshallian rights-based models by emphasizing how environmental rights are a potential fourth dimension alongside civil, political, and social rights (Dean, 2000). “ therefore the text: “ (delete the rest of the sentence: have broadened the notion of citizenship). “ should not have been included.
