The Faun in the Garden

Michelangelo and the Poetic Origins of Italian Renaissance Art

PAUL BAROLSKY

"In The Faun in the Garden, Barolsky offers a new reading of Vasari, Condivi, and Michelangelo which substantially enlarges our understanding of Renaissance biography, autobiography, and the ideas and attitudes about artistic creativity. . . . This is a stimulating, thought-provoking book."

—Bruce Cole, Indiana University

The Viewer as Poet

The Renaissance Response to Art

NORMAN E. LAND

"Right now, when art historians are looking anew at the tradition of their discipline, nothing could be more timely than this far reaching study of the literary structures of Renaissance art writing. . . . The synthesis presented in the volume, rich in its implications for the analysis of art writing in other periods, will be of great interest to historians, critics, and other lovers of Renaissance art." —David Carrier,

Carnegie Mellon University

Garcilaso de la Vega and the Italian Renaissance

DANIEL L. HEIPLE

"Scholarly, erudite, and impeccably researched, Heiple's work attempts to place Garcilaso and his poetry into the larger context of Renaissance humanism. This is without question a significant contribution to the field of Garcilaso studies as well as to the broader fields of Renaissance studies and Italo-Hispanic literary relations." —James Mandrell, Brandeis University

Penn State Studies in Romance Literatures

Margery Kempe's Dissenting Fictions

LYNN STALEY

"Staley has used and made advances on the best recent writing on Margery Kempe, and her book is a consolidation of the new position that has been won for the Book in English literary culture and history. Her distinction of 'Kempe' and 'Margery' will become the standard mode of reference, I think, and her argument concerning the narrative purposes and 'fictional' status of the story, and its implication in questions of authority, in the broadest sense, will be generally accepted as definitive."

THE IMPACT OF THE REFORMATION

HEIKO A. OBERMAN

"These essays demonstrate again why Heiko Oberman is the leading student of the Reformation in his generation, and not only in America. Like all his scholarship, they reflect his unique combination of detailed knowledge, broad interests, and a capacity for stimulating generalization."

— William J. Bouwsma

"A welcome addition to Reformation studies. . . . Everywhere we hear Oberman's distinctive voice — erudite, pungent, playful, and pithy, striving to capture a truth for our times in the forgotten, suppressed, or repressed thoughts of bygone centuries."

— H. C. Erik Midelfort

"This new collection is vintage Oberman. . . . All of these studies, written over a span of nearly thirty years, are marked by Oberman's unique way of looking at familiar things and ideas and, even more, by his inimitable way of expressing his views."

Literary Milton Text, Pretext, Context

DIANA TREVIÑO BENET & MICHAEL LIEB, EDS.

In this seminal work of scholarship, ten major Miltonists argue the significance of a central tenet of the "new traditionalism": the author's intentionality is essential to the reader's understanding of the text. Essays explore the interrelationship of author, reader and text by reference to Milton's works.

Contributors: Regina Schwartz, Annabel Patterson, Joseph Wittreich, Mary Ann Radzinowicz, Diane McColley, Stephen M. Fallon, Jason P. Rosenblatt, Barbara K. Lewalski.

Major French Milton Critics of the Nineteenth Century

HARRY REDMAN, JR.

This unique study examines a dozen important French critics whose interest in Milton led them to devote an essay or book to him. Redman deals with each critic individually, citing passages from their writings and exploring the insights of each. Engaged in much more than a mere survey of the literature, Redman is able to make these scholars come alive as characters of their own time. Significant for the field of comparative literature.

Vol. 14, Language & Literature Series.

Policy in Love Lyric and Public in Ovid, Petrarch and Shakespeare

CHRISTOPHER MARTIN

Policy in Love contributes to a new understanding of "private" lyric poetry by engaging in close readings of Ovid, Petrarch and Shakespeare. Martin offers a new methodological approach for the interpretation of love lyrics, looking at textual indications of a public audience. He generates a theory of interpretation that accounts for the interaction of author and multiple audiences. This study will inevitably inspire studies of other authors.

Vol. 17, Language & Literature Series.

The Witness of Times Manifestations of Ideology in Seventeenth Century England

KATHERINE Z. KELLER
& GERALD J. SCHIFFHORST, EDS.

Discusses the "painfully interesting times" of the seventeenth century. Authors employ a historicist view in examining ideological struggles during the time, showing how that vision has become our own in this century. Contributors: Sharon Achinstein, Michael Bristol, Heather Campbell, Arthur Kinney, Catherine Gimelli Martin, Thomas Nowak, Annabel Patterson, Douglas Rutledge, Louise Schleimer, Sid Sondergard, Raymond Tumbleson.
