Gender Recognition Act 2004

Information for medical practitioners and chartered psychologists

Transsexual people have long lived in a state of limbo between the gender in which they live and the gender in which they were born, because that was how the law defined them. They are affected by the condition gender dysphoria (a medical condition recognised by the Chief Medical Officer) or gender identity disorder. The Gender Recognition Act 2004 remedies this situation and allows transsexual people who have taken decisive steps to live fully and permanently in their acquired gender to apply for legal recognition of that gender.

The Act establishes Gender Recognition Panels with the power to assess applications from transsexual people seeking legal recognition in their acquired gender. The panels will begin sitting in April 2005. Applicants will have to provide evidence supporting their applications in accordance with prescribed legal and medical criteria. They will need to satisfy the panel that they:

1. have or have had gender dysphoria;
2. have lived in the acquired gender for two years prior to the application;
3. intend to live permanently in the acquired gender.

The evidence that applicants are required to provide must include, among other things:

- two reports from registered medical practitioners, one of whom must be practising in the field of gender dysphoria
- alternatively, a report from a registered medical practitioner and a report from a chartered psychologist practising in the field of gender dysphoria
- a sworn statement from the transsexual person declaring that he or she has lived in the acquired gender for the past two years and intends to do so until death.

The medical reports must be provided by a registered medical practitioner or a chartered psychologist, contain details of a diagnosis of gender dysphoria and contain details of the treatment the applicant has undergone, is undergoing or has planned for the purpose of modifying sexual characteristics.

Medical proformas will be provided for applicants' medical practitioners or chartered psychologists to complete (if they so wish). Alternatively, medical practitioners or chartered psychologists may prefer to give their patient copies of their notes and/or letters about their case. It will be at the medical practitioners or chartered psychologists' discretion as to whether they choose to charge their patient for the medical reports.

Questions regarding the Gender Recognition Act 2004 can be directed to the Department of Constitutional Affairs' Gender Recognition Project who are responsible for the Act and the Government policy on transsexual people.
