

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

ROSARIO AGUILAR is assistant professor of political science at the Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas (CIDE) in Mexico City. She received her PhD from the University of Michigan. Her research focuses on the political and social consequences of prejudice related to people's racial appearance and gender in comparative perspective. She looks at how the process of assimilation into a different society impacts people's perception of their community's interests and the stereotypes they hold against each other. Her research mainly focuses on Mexico and the United States, where she has conducted experiments and surveys.

SEBASTIÁN LEANDRO ALIOTO holds a PhD in history from the Universidad Nacional del Sur (Argentina), where he is part-time assistant professor. He conducts research on different aspects of the history of Indian societies in the southern frontiers of the Spanish empire (and later Argentina and Chile) from the seventeenth through the nineteenth centuries, including interethnic cattle trade, war and uses of violence, medicine exchange, and linguistic intermediation.

MARISSA L. AMBIO is a lecturer in the Department of Hispanic Languages and Literature at Stony Brook University and holds a PhD from the Department of Latin American and Iberian Cultures at Columbia University. She specializes in Latino and Latin American literature and culture, particularly the periodical production of Cuban émigrés in New York during the Ten Years' War. Her current research focuses on the illustrated periodical and its use of visual culture to promote public education, and its relation to other national institutions with the same purpose, particularly the museum.

CINDIA ARANGO-LÓPEZ is a historian from the Universidad Nacional de Colombia in Medellín. Currently she is a master's student in geography at Universidad de los Andes, Bogotá, Colombia. She has worked in topics related to settlement and space occupation in the region of Antioquia during the colonial period, and recently with topics about mobility related to the displaced population of Colombia.

DINORAH AZPURU is an associate professor in the Department of Political Science at Wichita State University in Kansas and member of the Scientific Support Group of the Latin American Public Opinion Project (LAPOP) at Vanderbilt University. Her research has focused on contemporary US–Latin America relations, democratization in Latin America, and peace processes in Central America. She is coauthor of the book Construyendo la democracia en sociedades posconflicto: Guatemala y El Salvador en perspectiva comparada (2007). Her work has been published in more than ten countries in the Americas and Europe and has received funding from several organizations.

LEONARDO SANGALI BARONE is a PhD candidate in Public Administration and Government at Fundação Getúlio Vargas (FGV-EAESP). He is also a junior researcher at the Centro de Economia e Política do Setor Público (CEPESP-FGV), at the Centro Brasileiro de Análise e Planejamento (CEBRAP), and at the Centro de Estudos da Metrópole (CEM). His main research interests are Brazilian politics, political parties, elections, policy evaluation, quantitative research methods, and statistics.

ANTONIO N. BOJANIC is professor of economics at Universidad Nuestra Señora de La Paz, in La Paz, Bolivia. He is currently a visiting professor at Tulane University, in New Orleans. His publications include "The Effect of Coca and FDI on the Level of Corruption in Bolivia" (2014), "The Composition of Public Expenditures and Economic Growth in Bolivia" (2013), "Inflación e incertidumbre inflacionaria en Bolivia" (2013), and "The Impact of Financial Development and Trade on the Economic Growth of Bolivia" (2012), among others. He has also published a book, Evolution of the Bolivian Economy: A Time-Series Approach (2013), in which the longest macroeconomic variables data set on Bolivia is presented. He has served as a consultant for multilateral and bilateral aid agencies on several development projects throughout Latin America and Africa.

DEXTER BONIFACE is the Weddell Chair of the Americas and associate professor in the Department of Political Science at Rollins College in Winter Park, Florida. His research interests include Brazilian politics, democratization and U.S.–Latin America relations. He is coeditor, with Thomas Legler and Sharon F. Lean, of Promoting Democracy in the Americas (2007).

KIRK BOWMAN is professor in the Sam Nunn School of International Affairs at the Georgia Institute of Technology and Jon R. Wilcox Term Professor in Soccer and Global Politics. His most recent books are Peddling Paradise: The Politics of Tourism in Latin America (2013) and Lessons from Latin America: Innovations in Politics, Culture, and Development (with Felipe Arocena, 2014). His next book examines the nexus between soccer and global politics.

SAUL CUNOW is a PhD candidate in the Department of Political Science at the University of California, San Diego. His research focuses on political institutions, elections, and political behavior in Latin America.

SCOTT DESPOSATO is associate professor of political science at the University of California, San Diego. He specializes in Latin American politics, democratic institutions, voting behavior, and methodology. He completed his PhD at UCLA in 2001.

JUAN FRANCISCO JIMÉNEZ holds a PhD in history from the Universidad Nacional del Sur (Argentina), at which he is a full-time professor. His research activities focus on the history of Indian societies of the pampas, North Patagonia, and Araucanía from the seventeenth to the nineteenth centuries; on this subject he has published several books and articles in his country and abroad.

ALEXANDRE CÉSAR CUNHA LEITE is a professor in the Graduate Program in International Relations and group coordinator of studies and research in the Asia-Pacific at the State University of Paraíba (UEPB).

CARLOS LUDENA is a climate change economist at the Inter-American Development Bank's Climate Change and Sustainability Division. He is leading studies on the economics of climate change for Bolivia, Peru, and Colombia; the inclusion of climate change considerations in Producer Support Estimates (PSEs); development of vulnerability indicators in the IADB's agriculture and water projects; and analysis of poverty impacts of climate change on agriculture. Further, he is coordinating the IADB's work on Nationally Appropriate Mitigation Actions (NAMAs) and studies on voluntary carbon markets in Brazil and Peru, and is leading a project for the inclusion of energy efficiency in social housing in Argentina.

SÉRGIO PRAÇA is an assistant professor of public policy at the Universidade Federal do ABC, in São Paulo, Brazil. He conducts research on legislative institutions, state capacity, bureaucracy, and budget institutions with a focus on Brazil. His work has appeared in journals such as Brazilian Political Science Review, Revista Brasileira de Ciências Sociais, Novos Estudos Cebrap, and Journal of Politics in Latin America, among others.

LUIS SÁNCHEZ-AYALA has a PhD in geography from Florida State University. Currently he is a professor of geography at Universidad de los Andes, Bogotá. His research interests are related to the spatiality of political and cultural issues, specifically, questions related to migration, diasporas, and transnationalism; identity and territory; boundaries and borders; globalization and development; third-world urbanization; electoral issues; geographical education; and cartography.

CANDACE SLATER is professor of Spanish and Portuguese at the University of California, Berkeley, where she is also the only humanities faculty associate in the Energy and Resources Graduate Group. She is the recipient of honors including Guggenheim, National Endowment for the Humanities, and American Council of Learned Societies fellowships and has been doing research on Brazilian folk and popular literature and on representations of the environment—especially as these relate to the Amazon—for many years. The author of seven books, she is presently researching contemporary images of the Amazon and the Pantanal. In addition, she has just completed a new study on the ongoing presence of violence in three different groups of seemingly fantastic traditional tales.

ROBERTO TELLERIA is currently working as an agricultural policy specialist for the International Center for Agricultural Research in the Dry Areas (ICARDA) in Amman, Jordan. A Bolivian citizen, he earned a PhD in agricultural policies at Reading University, United Kingdom, in 2007. He has published numerous articles and book chapters in areas including agricultural policy analysis; water, trade, food security, and livestock policies; rural development; and agricultural productivity.

GABRIELA VALDIVIA is associate professor of geography at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. She draws on political ecology to examine environmental governance in the Andean Amazon region: how states, firms, and civil society appropriate and transform resources to meet their interests, and how capturing and putting resources to work transforms cultural and ecological communities. Her latest project examines everyday experiences of living with oil in Esmeraldas, Ecuador.

DANIEL VILLAR holds a PhD in history from the Universidad Nacional del Sur (Argentina), where he is a full-time professor. His research activities focus on the history of Indian societies of the pampas, North Patagonia, and Araucanía (seventeenth to nineteenth centuries); on this subject he has published several books and articles in his country and abroad.

KARLEEN JONES WEST is an assistant professor of political science and international relations at SUNY Geneseo. Her research focuses on ethnic politics, political behavior, and democratic institutions in Latin America and has appeared in Latin Americanist, Comparative Political Studies, Party Politics, and Legislative Studies Quarterly, among other journals.

SONJA WOLF is a Consejo Nacional de Ciencia y Tecnología (CONACYT) researcher with the Drug Policy Program at the Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas (CIDE) Región Centro. She has been a postdoctoral fellow at the Instituto Tecnológico Autónomo de México (ITAM) and the Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México (UNAM), where she conducted research on street gangs, organized crime, and security assistance programs. Her current research focuses on crime and violence and street gangs as well as security and drug policy in Mexico and Central America. She holds a PhD in international politics from Aberystwyth University. Her work has appeared in the Journal of Latin American Studies, Latin American Politics and Society, and the Bulletin of Latin American Research.