
Published by the Weed Science Society of America, Copyright 2017 by the Weed Science Society of America.

Glyphosate-resistant waterhemp (Amaranthus rudis Sauer), one of the most difficult-to-control weeds, emerging in Nebraska. Waterhemp can emerge from May to August in Nebraska, making it difficult to control. Preemergence followed by postemergence herbicide programs with effective modes of action provided season-long control of glyphosate-resistant waterhemp in glyphosate-resistant soybean production fields. For more information, refer to article by Jhala et al. Photo is courtesy of Debali Sarangi.