

Ethical Patterns in Early Christian Thought

ERIC OSBORN

An examination of the beginning of Christian ethical thought which shows that, within great personal variety, certain patterns or concepts remain constant. Righteousness, discipleship, faith and love are traced in this book from the New Testament through to Augustine. Professor Osborn is concerned to explain rather than defend, to look at the way conclusions are reached, and to show the rich diversity of early Christian thought.

Jesus and the Law in the Synoptic Tradition

ROBERT BANKS

This monograph deals with a major problem of New Testament exegetical and related studies – the attitude of Jesus to the Mosaic Law. While much has been written on the subject, a fresh approach in the light of the insight of, for instance, redaction-criticism and our increased knowledge of attitudes to the Law in Intertestamental Judaism has become overdue.

Sōma* in Biblical Theology

With Emphasis on Pauline Anthropology

ROBERT H. GUNDRY

This monograph deals with the use of the Greek word traditionally translated 'body' but recently as 'person', especially in certain parts of the writings of Paul. Against the trends of modern biblical theology, Dr Gundry seeks to show that sōma always refers to the individual physical body and that it should be defined in substantive categories.
