Franz X. Eder is Professor at the Department of Economic and Social History, University of Vienna. He has carried out research on quantitative methods and discourse analysis, on the history of labour organisation, and the history of family, consumption and sexuality. Current research projects are on the history of sexuality and consumption in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries; he is finishing an introduction to the history of sexuality in Europe from ancient times to the present. He is co-editor of the Österreichische Zeitschrift für Geschichtswissenschaften and Studien zur Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte and editor of the Bibliography of the History of Western Sexuality (3rd edn, http://www.univie.ac.at/sexbibl/). His most recent publication on the history of sexuality is Kultur der Begierde: Eine Geschichte der Sexualität (rev. 2nd edn, C.H. Beck, 2009).

Jan de Graaf is a PhD student at the University of Portsmouth’s Centre for European and International Studies Research. He completed his Research Master’s at Utrecht University with a thesis on the international socialist movement and the decline and fall of the socialist and social democratic parties in Eastern Europe, 1944–8. The results of that thesis were reworked into two academic publications. His current project, ‘Across the Iron Curtain: European Social Democracy between World War and Cold War, 1943–1948’, is a comparative history of the post-war European socialist and social democratic parties, focusing on the Czechoslovakian Social Democratic Party and the Polish Socialist Party in Eastern Europe, and the French Socialist Party and the Italian Socialist Party in Western Europe.

Armin Grünbacher is Lecturer in Modern History at the University of Birmingham. His recent publications include The Making of German Democracy: Politics and Society in West Germany During the Adenauer Period, 1945–65 (Manchester University Press, 2010, Documents in Modern History) and ‘The Americanisation That Never Was: The First Decade of the Baden-Badener Unternehmergespräche, 1954–64 and Top Management Training in 1950s Germany’, Business History, 54, 2. He is currently working on a monograph about the mentality of post-war German industrialists during the Adenauer years (Bloomsbury Academic, 2016), working title: West German Industrialists and the Making of the Economic Miracle: A History of Recovery and Mentality; and an article on the Bad Harzburg management training model during the 1950s. and 60s, working title ‘“Palladium of Militarist Restoration or Embourgeoisement of the Workers”?: The Bad Harzburger Akademie für Führungskräfte der Wirtschaft in the 1950s and 60s’.

Victoria Harris is a Fellow at the University of Birmingham. Her research interests include the histories of sexuality, crime and deviance in modern Germany and wider Europe. She is the author of Selling Sex in the Reich: Prostitutes in German Society, 1914–1945 (Oxford University Press, 2010) and ‘Sex on the Margins: New Directions in the Historiography of Sexuality and Gender’, The Historical Journal, 53, 4 (2010), and is also the English-language editor of Letters to Hitler (Polity, 2012). She is currently writing a book on the social history of intoxication in modern Germany and is engaged in an interdisciplinary collaborative project entitled ‘Intoxication of the Senses’.

Dan Healey is Professor of Modern History in the Department of History, University of Reading, England. He wrote the first book-length history of Russian and Soviet homosexuality, Homosexual Desire in Revolutionary Russia: The Regulation of Sexual and Gender Dissent (University of Chicago Press, 2001), which was revised, expanded, and published in a Russian edition in 2008 by Ladomir Press, Moscow. Healey examined the early Soviet sexual revolution in his Bolshevik Sexual Forensics: Diagnosing Disorder in the Clinic and Courtroom, 1917–1939 (Northern Illinois University Press, 2009). He is also the co-editor of essay collections on the history of Russian masculinity and on the history of Soviet medicine; and he continues to publish extensively on gender and sexuality in Russia. He is now writing a history of medicine in Soviet labour camps for Yale University Press, entitled Gulag Hospital: The Paradox of Medical Care in Stalin’s Forced-Labor Camps.

Dagmar Herzog is Distinguished Professor of History and the Daniel Rose Faculty Scholar at the Graduate Center, City University of New York, where she teaches courses in Modern European history, the history of the Holocaust and its aftermath, interdisciplinary theory and research methodology, and the histories of gender and sexuality. At the Graduate Center, she has conducted extensive comparative and transnational research on how religion and secularization have affected social and political developments in modern Europe. She is the author of Sexuality in Europe: A Twentieth-Century History (Cambridge University Press, 2011), forthcoming also in Turkish; Sex in Crisis: The New Sexual Revolution and the Future of American Politics (Basic Books, 2008); Sex after Fascism: Memory and Morality in Twentieth-Century Germany (Princeton, 2005), which has been translated into German and Japanese; and Intimacy and Exclusion: Religious Politics in Pre-Revolutionary Baden (Princeton University Press, 1996; Transaction, 2007). She is the editor and co-editor of six anthologies, including, most recently, After the History of Sexuality: German Genealogies With and Beyond Foucault (Berghahn, 2012, with Helmut Puff and Scott Spector); Brutality and Desire: War and Sexuality in Europe’s Twentieth Century (Palgrave Macmillan, 2009); and Lessons and Legacies VII: The Holocaust in International Perspective (Northwestern University Press, 2007). She serves as a member of the Board of Editors for the American Historical Review and is currently at work on two new projects: one on the intertwined vicissitudes of disability rights and reproductive rights in the European Union, and one on the politics of the European and American histories of psychoanalysis, trauma, and desire in the post-war era.

Mary Hilson is Senior Lecturer in Scandinavian History at University College London, and has previously worked at the universities of Uppsala and Helsinki. Her main research interests are in transnational social history, especially the history of the co-operative movement in the Nordic countries and beyond. Together with Silke Neunsinger she is also leading a project on the global history of consumer co-operation, 1800–2010.

Helen Parr is Lecturer in International Relations at Keele University. She is author of Britain’s Policy towards the European Community, 1964–7: Harold Wilson and Britain’s World Role (Routledge, 2006) and co-editor of The Wilson Governments Reconsidered (Routledge, 2006). She is currently working on the Parachute Regiment and the 1982 Falklands War.

Julia Roos is an Associate Professor of History at Indiana University, Bloomington, and author of Weimar Through the Lens of Gender: Prostitution Reform, Woman’s Emancipation, and German Democracy, 1919–1933 (University of Michigan Press, 2010). Her work on Weimar-era prostitution has appeared in multiple anthologies and journals, including the Journal of the History of Sexuality and Central European History. Her current research focuses on aspects of gender, nationalism and internationalism in the 1920s propaganda campaign against France’s colonial occupation troops in the Rhineland (the so-called ‘Black Horror on the Rhine’). Most recently, she has published ‘Nationalism, Racism, and Propaganda in Early Weimar Germany: Contradictions in the Campaign against the “Black Horror on the Rhine”’, German History, 30, 1 (March 2012), 45–74.

Nadine Rossol is Lecturer in Modern European History at the University of Essex. Her publications include ‘Ordinary Police Work? The Anti-Semitic Policy of Cologne’s Police in the Third Reich’, in G. Oram, ed., Conflict and Legality: Policing Mid-Twentieth Century Europe (Francis Boutle Publishers, 2003); ‘Flaggenkrieg am Badestrand: Lokale Möglichkeiten repräsentativer Mitgestaltung in der Weimarer Republik’, Zeitschrift für Geschichtswissenschaft, 7/8 (2008) and Performing the Nation in Intervar Germany: Sport, Spectacle and Political Symbolism 1926–1936 (Palgrave, 2010). Having been supported by an Alexander von Humboldt Fellowship in the academic year 2011/2, Nadine is currently working on a project examining the German police as educators of the public (1920s–1950s).

Jeffrey Weeks is Emeritus Professor of Sociology at London South Bank University (LSBU). He is the author of over twenty books, and more than 100 articles and papers, chiefly on the history and social organisation of sexuality, family and intimate life. His books include Same Sex Intimacies: Families of Choice and Other Life Experiments (with...
Central European History offers articles, review essays, and book reviews that range widely through the history of Germany, Austria, and other German-speaking regions of Central Europe from the medieval era to the present. All topics and approaches to history are welcome, whether cultural, social, political, diplomatic, intellectual, economic, and military history, as well as historiography and methodology. Contributions that treat new fields, such as post-1945 and post-1989 history, maturing fields such as gender history, and less-represented fields such as medieval history and the history of the Habsburg lands are especially desired. The journal thus aims to be the primary venue for scholarly exchange and debate among scholars of the history of Central Europe.
International Review of Social History

Published for the Internationaal Instituut voor Sociale Geschiedenis

Editor
Aad Blok, Internationaal Instituut voor Sociale Geschiedenis,
The Netherlands

International Review of Social History is one of the leading journals in its field. Truly global in its scope, it focuses on research in social and labour history from a comparative and transnational perspective, both in the modern and in the early modern period, and across periods. The journal combines quality, depth and originality of its articles with an open eye for theoretical innovation and new insights and methods from within its field and from contiguous disciplines. Besides research articles, it features surveys of new themes and subject fields, a suggestions and debates section, review essays and book reviews. It is esteemed for its annotated bibliography of social history titles, and also publishes an annual supplement of specially commissioned essays on a current theme. The 2011 special issue will examine ‘The Joy and Pain of Work: Global Attitudes and Valuations, 1500-1650’.

Journal of Global History addresses the main problems of global change over time, together with the diverse histories of globalization. It also examines counter-currents to globalization, including those that have structured other spatial units. The journal seeks to transcend the dichotomy between ‘the West and the rest’, straddle traditional regional boundaries, relate material to cultural and political history, and overcome thematic fragmentation in historiography. The journal also acts as a forum for interdisciplinary conversations across a wide variety of social and natural sciences.
Urban History occupies a central place in historical scholarship, with an outstanding record of interdisciplinary contributions, and a broad-based and distinguished panel of referees and international advisors. Each issue features wide-ranging research articles covering social, economic, political and cultural aspects of the history of towns and cities. The journal also includes book reviews, summaries of PhD theses, and surveys of recent articles in academic journals. In addition, Urban History acts as a forum for stimulating debate on historiographical and methodological issues.

Contemporary European History covers the history of eastern and western Europe, including the United Kingdom, from 1918 to the present. By combining a wide geographical compass with a relatively short time span, this journal achieves both range and depth. It is open to all forms of historical enquiry – including cultural, economic, international, political and social approaches – and welcomes comparative and transnational analysis.

Submissions
Articles submitted for publication should be sent electronically to Contemporary European History, at ceh@sheffield.ac.uk or, in the case of the submission from North America, to the Corresponding Editor for North America, Professor Amir Weiner, weiner@stanford.edu. Correspondence for articles submitted in other major European languages, if accepted for publication, will be translated. All articles, including those commissioned, will be refereed.

An abstract of each article is published in English, French and German.

Submission of a paper will be taken to imply that it is unpublished and is not being considered for publication elsewhere. On acceptance of a paper, the author will be asked to assign copyright (on certain conditions) to Cambridge University Press. An article cannot be published unless a signed copyright form is returned promptly.

Contributors are responsible for obtaining permission to reproduce any material in which they do not hold copyright and for ensuring that the appropriate acknowledgements are included in their text.

For all other use, permission should be sought from Cambridge or from the American Branch of Cambridge University Press.

Information on Contemporary European History and all other Cambridge journals can be accessed via http://journals.cambridge.org and in North America via http://www.cambridge.org
