God Almighty Make Me Free

CHRISTIANITY IN PREMANCIPATION JAMAICA

GOD ALMIGHTY MAKE ME FREE

Christianity in Premanicipation Jamaica

Shirley C. Gordon

"[H]ere is . . . the event which made not only the church in Jamaica today what it is but molded the goals, aspirations, and culture into the new history it is." —Horace O. Russell
Jamaican historian Shirley C. Gordon argues that the conversion of slaves to evangelical Christianity was achieved through black and colored proselytizers who linked Christianity to slaves' growing aspirations for freedom, and freed persons' desires for socio-political recognition in colonial society.

SUNY PRESS ANNOUNCES A NEW BOOK SERIES IN

Religion and American Public Life

William Dean, Editor, Iliff School of Theology

Decades ago Reinhold Niebuhr, Perry Miller, and John Dewey constructed major interpretations of America, with particular attention to the religious underpinnings. Today their intellectual grandchildren have, on the whole, abandoned that task.

This abandonment occurred because intellectuals were legitimately (1) skeptical of the existence of a common American culture; (2) suspicious of the people now discussing the religious meaning of America; and (3) uneasy about acknowledging the religious, spiritual, or mythological grounds for an American public philosophy—past or present.

Lacking a serious and critical contemporary literature on the spiritual meaning of America, the American public came also to lack a vivid dedication to the common good.

This series responds to these problems with books on the interaction between America's spiritual "sense of the whole" and its active public life. The series concentrates on the intersection between American history and American religious and moral thought. Recognizing that spiritual assumptions underlie secular as well as sacred habits, we seek manuscripts that study American nationalism, naturalism, philosophies, public rituals, arts, reform movements, and styles of civility as well as American biblical selfunderstandings, religious thought, pieties, and churches.

Manuscripts submitted to the series should be pragmatic in purpose, readable in style, and rigorous in evidence and argument. Most books in the series will be published simultaneously in hardcover and paperback editions to facilitate course adoptions and attract a wider audience. Manuscripts are invited from religion scholars, historians, philosophers, literary scholars, sociologists, political scientists and public intellectuals.
