interesting essay on the whole question. The first part of his book deals with the etiology and pathological anatomy of laryngeal phthisis; dealing with the question of primary laryngeal phthisis, which is so important in reference to its curability, he relates a case of artificial laryngeal ulceration from injection of tubercle bacilli into the jugular vein of a rabbit, and speaks of the entrance of tubercular bacilli into the epithelium of the mucous ducts, the relation of laryngeal catarrh to laryngeal phthisis, of catarrhal ulcers, of laryngitis chronic desquamativa (pachydermia diffusa of Virchow) and its relation to erosive ulcers. He also insists that circumscribed affections of the posterior laryngeal wall are in the highest degree suspicious of laryngeal phthisis. He adds a chapter on the histological and anatomical proofs of the curability of laryngeal phthisis. He says with great truth that we must prove the possibility of the spontaneous curability of a disease if we are to urge a cure by our medications. The second part of the book treats of the different cures of laryngeal phthisis. He relates and criticizes the method just now used for this purpose, with special relation to the treatment with lactic acid recommended by Krause and himself. He gives a great many observations on the influence of this medicament, which prove its efficacy. In eleven cases he has observed a cure after this treatment during six months to two years and six months. He then speaks of the surgical treatment of the disease, firstly of the incisions of Moritz Schmidt, and then on his own method of curettlement of the larynx with subsequent lactic acid treatment. He describes his new spoons—four different instruments which can be fixed on one handle and can also be fixed in every position. The larynx must be anaesthetised in a complete manner with cocaine, and then all pathological products must be removed by scraping movements of the instrument. He details twelve cases in which cicatrization resulted, in nine within three to sixteen months. Then follows a description of the method of submucous injections of lactic acid, which did not give to the author such good results as are described by Dr Major (Montreal). A short report on the effect of treatment with iodoform emulsions follows. The author concludes with the results of the surgical treatment (sixteen cases, with twelve cures, three improvements, one negative), and adds remarks upon the general treatment of laryngeal phthisis. The contents of the book can only be indicated shortly here, but it may be said that it will be necessary for every laryngologist to read it. Those also who do not share the enthusiasm of the author for such an energetic treatment of the disease, will find in it a very well written and interesting monograph on laryngeal phthisis.

NOTE.

Dr. Solomon Solis-Cohen, of Philadelphia, a Fellow of the American Laryngological Association, has been elected Professor of Clinical Medicine and Applied Therapeutics in the Philadelphia Polyclinic; and has also been appointed Lecturer on Special Therapeutics at Jefferson Medical College.
