Memories of a Writing Life

Walter Allen

A well-known British novelist and critic, Allen writes with warmth and wit of London of the '30s, first impressions of America as seen in the '30s, and later revised impressions on a return visit in the '50s. He gives us vivid and often very funny memories of writers such as Auden and MacNeice as well as considered portraits of many other writers, including Desmond MacCarthy, Wyndham Lewis, Joyce Cary, and Lionel Trilling. Entertaining and good-humored, Allen's memories are a noteworthy contribution to our understanding of an age.

"These . . . are an all-rounder's recollections of people met and places visited in the course of a writing lifetime. They are infused with the generous enthusiasm that is Walter Allen's hallmark as critic and commentator."—Julian Symons, Times Literary Supplement

THE LITERARY PERSONA

Robert C. Elliott

Since the word persona entered the critical vocabulary, it has both revolutionized the interpretation of literary texts and been abused and despised. Elliott uses the term to focus his discussion of certain principles of literary criticism and to illuminate the work of writers as diverse as Chaucer, Pope, Swift, Proust, and Isherwood. Dealing with this concept in both historical and theoretical terms, he demonstrates unmistakably both the critical value of persona-criticism and its necessary ambiguities.

THE MYSTERIES OF IDENTITY

A Theme in Modern Literature

Robert Langbaum

"Langbaum is clearly both a major critic and a major cultural historian, and The Mysteries of Identity seems to me both a profound meditation on the modern self and a directive for regaining contact with an underlying force that may reenergize and reestablish identity."—James R. Kincaid, Virginia Quarterly Review

THE VALUE OF THE INDIVIDUAL

Self and Circumstance in Autobiography

Karl Joachim Weintraub

"No one else writing about autobiography and individuality has anything like the historian's perspective Weintraub commands."—James Olney, New Republic

"This is a noble book in the great tradition of intellectual history."—Arnaldo Momigliano, Journal of Theological Studies

Critical Reading

Theories of the Symbol

By TZVETAN TODOROV, translated by Catherine Porter. Focusing on the theories of verbal symbolism, the well-known critic Tzvetan Todorov centers his book on what he sees as a radical change that occurred at the end of the 18th century when the classical view of symbols—which had dominated Western thinking for centuries—gave way to the romantic view. "An important book. . . . Todorov is, as usual, ahead of the game."—José V. Harari. $22.50

Interpretive Conventions

The Reader in the Study of American Fiction

By STEVEN MAILLOUX. Concern with readers and reading has increased dramatically over the past decade. There is talk of implied readers, informed readers, actual readers, ideal readers, and narratees as well as other assorted reading audiences. This new book provides an introduction to reader-response criticism, while developing the author's own specific reader-oriented approach to literature. $18.50

The Formal Principle of the Novel

By AUSTIN M. WRIGHT. Many critics today view the idea of formal unity in a novel as irrelevant, or obsolete, or as an impediment to understanding the way in which literature works. Offering a defense of unity in the novel, Austin Wright—a novelist as well as critic—here proposes and tests his own theory of form that is usable not only in the study of traditional texts but with experimental works as well. $19.95

The Play of Faulkner's Language

By JOHN T. MATTHEWS. "I know of no one who discusses Faulkner's language with Matthews's skill and insight, and many of the provocative points are the result of his Derridian perspective. The results of his study are innovative—at times dazzlingly original—readings of Faulkner's works."—Edgar A. Dryden, University of Arizona. Includes detailed readings of Mosquitoes, Flags in the Dust, The Sound and the Fury, Absalom, Absalom!, The Hamlet and Go Down, Moses. $19.50

The Institution of Criticism

By PETER UWE HOHENDAHL. The West German radicals of the 1960s announced the death of literature. For them literature both past and present, as well as conventional discussions of literary issues, had lost its meaning. In this collection of essays, the author explores the implications of this cultural crisis from a Marxist perspective and attempts to define the tasks and responsibilities of criticism in advanced capitalist societies. $19.50
