

Ferdinand de Saussure

by Jonathan Culler

In the Penguin Modern Masters series,
edited by Frank Kermode

Ferdinand de Saussure's role as the founder of modern linguistics alone would qualify him as a "modern master." Yet, as Jonathan Culler points out, Saussure has other claims to our attention. In this important new book, the author discusses Saussure's contribution to the fields of behavioral studies, anthropology, and literary criticism. His work, based on the notion of relativity, is the essence of modernist thought, and his treatment of language is central to new ways of thinking about man, especially about the connection between language and mind.

Semantics 1

Semantics 2

JOHN LYONS

This is a major new study of semantics. Volume 1 provides a general and comprehensive introduction, synthesising work on meaning and communication from many disciplines and setting semantics in the larger framework of semiotics. Little technical knowledge is presupposed, and all the relevant terms and concepts are carefully explained as they are used.

Volume 2, which can be read independently, deals with more specifically linguistic problems in semantics and contains substantial original material. There are in particular important theoretical chapters on Semantics and Grammar, Deixis, Mood and Illocutionary Force, and Modality.

Acoustic Phonetics

A Course of Basic Readings

Edited by D. B. FRY

D. B. Fry has edited a basic course of readings on the acoustics of speech. The collection includes all the important classical papers in the field. It is carefully structured to present the student with a coherent picture of the relations between language units and the corresponding sound-waves and to explain the laws that govern these relations. £8.75 net

The Phoneme

Its Nature and its Use

The late DANIEL JONES

The Phoneme, first published in 1950, is now not only a standard work on its subject but comprises Daniel Jones' major and final expression of his theoretical attitudes. This is a reissue of the third (1976) edition which includes the appendix on the history and meaning of the word 'phoneme'. It sets out in detail the author's conclusions about the nature and function of the phoneme, illustrating them from over 40 languages. £6.50 net

CAMBRIDGE STUDIES IN LINGUISTICS 18

The Syntax of Welsh

A Transformational Study of the Passive

G. M. AWBERY

The first full-length study of a Celtic language from the standpoint of modern linguistic theory. Dr Awbery particularly discusses a topic — the passive form of the verb — which has itself been a central interest in previous work of transformational grammar. She is thus able to test certain tenets of the transformational theory against data from a previously unconsidered language.

A Grammar of Yidiñ

R. M. W. DIXON

Professor Dixon's book The Dyirbal Language of North Queensland (Cambridge 1972) is acknowledged to be a classic study, the first comprehensive account of an Australian Aboriginal language. His new study of Yidiñ is directly comparable in importance. Yidiñ, which is also a dying language, is Dyirbal's northerly neighbour, but the two languages have striking and fundamental differences in each area of grammar.

Foundations of Theoretical Phonology

J. FOLEY

The 'standard' theory of Chomsky and Halle has dominated phonology in recent years. It has, of course, been subject to modification and to criticism, but not of a really fundamental kind. Dr Foley does here offer a fundamental criticism and a genuine theoretical alternative.

How to Do Things with Words

J. L. Austin

Edited by J. O. Urmson and Marina Sbisa

J. L. Austin's 1955 William James Lectures, 'a choice work by one of the most acute and original minds that England has produced in our time' (The Times Literary Supplement), were first published in 1962, the printed version being based upon his very full lecture notes. For this second edition the editors have returned to the original notes, and their revision of text and appendix makes this a clearer, and, at the same time, more faithful record of Austin's words. New Orientations in the Teaching of English

Peter Strevens

In this volume Mr. Strevens identifies and surveys these issues in applied linguistics and language-teaching methodology which currently constitute the major concerns of the field. Many of the papers which have appeared before in print have been substantially rewritten so that, together with the papers printed here for the first time, they make a volume which is a coherent and accessible account of those new orientations. It will be of importance to teachers in training and students of applied linguistics and education. Paper covers £5 Forthcoming

The Edinburgh Course in Applied Linguistics

Volume 4: Testing and Experimental Methods

Edited by J. P. B. Allen and Alan Davies

This volume is concerned with the role of testing and experimental methods in applied linguistics. This role is seen not only as an important extension of the theory and techniques discussed in Volumes 2 and 3, but also as a separate and central element of applied linguistics. After an introductory chapter which discusses the relation between tests and experiments, chapters 2 and 3 consider tests, first from the general point of view and then from the practical one. Chapters 4, 5, and 6 then consider experiments ranging from the description of data to the analysis of results and the use inference theory. £8.00 Paper covers £6

Halliday: System and Function in Language

Selected Papers

Edited by Gunther Kress

M. A. K. Halliday's important contribution to theoretical and applied linguistics has long been recognised as fundamental but until now his writings have been dispersed over a very wide range of journals and other publications. This selection is doubly important in that it brings together for the first time some of the most important of these writings and also offers a coherent picture of the development of Halliday's theory. Several previously unpublished papers add to the value of the collection. Halliday's position as a teacher and a thinker is unique and the present selection has much to offer both the specialist and the general reader who wants to know more about this mainstream in British linguistics.

The Edinburgh Course in Applied Linguistics

Volume 4: Testing and Experimental Methods

Edited by J. P. B. Allen and Alan Davies

This final volume of the course breaks new ground in bringing together papers on testing and experimental methods which will be of equal interest to applied linguists and language teachers involved in the actual process of test construction, and to people whose interest centres in statistics and testing procedures.

The other titles in the course are:

Volume 1: Readings for Applied Linguistics

Volume 2: Papers in Applied Linguistics

Volume 3: Techniques in Applied Linguistics

Languages of the West Indies

Douglas Taylor

*with an introduction by Sidney W. Mintz
and Dell Hymes*

Representing the culmination of more than forty years of linguistic and ethnographic research, Douglas Taylor's work presents the languages of the Caribbean in all their variegated richness. The author treats both the Amerindian languages of the Caribbean (Nepuyo, Shebayo, Yao, Taino, Arawak, and Island-Carib) and the so-called creole languages commonly associated with the enslaved Africans whose descendants make up the majority of the Caribbean population. *In the series Johns Hopkins Studies in Atlantic History and Culture edited by Richard Price and Franklin W. Disorders of Fluency

And Their Effects on Communication

Peggy Dalton and W. J. Hardcastle

Studies in Language Disability and Remediation 3

The authors address themselves to the problem of deciding what constitutes a pathological disfluency as distinct from 'normal' nonfluency. In the first part of the book, they bring together research findings from a wide variety of disciplines including speech therapy, phonetics, linguistics, language teaching, psychology and sociology in outlining some of the general factors contributing to an evaluation of fluency. In the second part they discuss those disorders usually considered to be specific fluency problems, namely stuttering and cluttering. The authors stress throughout that disruption of fluency is a disability affecting communication as a whole for both speaker and listener.

Modern Phonology

Alan H. Sommerstein

Theoretical Linguistics 2

A descriptive and critical survey of the main theoretical streams in twentieth-century phonology. Alan Sommerstein pays particular attention to the various forms of phonemic analysis, to Prague School phonology, and to the prosodic and stratificational theories. He gives a detailed account of generative phonology and the issues within it which have been the foci of investigation since the appearance of The Sound Pattern of English by Halle and Chomsky in 1968. The book ends with a discussion of selected aspects of phonological change.

CURRENT ISSUES IN LINGUISTIC THEORY

Edited by ROGER W. COLE

This book is a state-of-the-art survey of a wide spectrum of sub-disciplines within linguistics by some of the most prominent contributors to linguistic theory of our day. The areas covered include phonology, syntax, semantics, discourse theory, sociolinguistics, and historical linguistics. Taken together, the eight essays in this volume do more than exemplify a number of the most interesting approaches being taken in linguistics today: they point the directions in which the discipline and its most exciting sub-fields are likely to move in the coming decade.

COLETTE GRINEVALD CRAIG

Written from the perspective of the transformation theory of grammar, The Structure of Jacaltec is a model study of the syntax of an unwritten language. It is the most thorough, modern syntactic exposition of a Mayan language ever to be published and is the first native American Indian grammar of such scope.

This book is an important contribution to general linguistic knowledge and to Mayan studies. It will be a research tool for linguists interested in language universals, a basic text for the study of descriptive linguistics and syntax, and a reference manual for all Mayan linguists.

THE LINGUISTICS ASSOCIATION

The Linguistics Association of Great Britain was founded in 1959 to promote the study of linguistics and to provide for its members both a forum for discussion and facilities for co-operation in furtherance of their interest in linguistics. The Association holds annual spring and autumn meetings, at which original papers are presented in plenary sessions and in section meetings devoted to special interests.

Persons interested in linguistics are eligible for election as members, subject to the approval of the Committee. BRITISH NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR LINGUISTICS

A British National Committee for Linguistics has been set up under the aegis of the British Academy, in the first instance for a period of three years. It is intended that it shall keep under review relations with international bodies in the field of linguistics, provide a channel of communication between such bodies and British linguists, and hold consultations on matters of common interest and concern. The committee is composed of three representatives from the British Academy, and two each from the LAGB, the Philological Society and the British Association for Applied Linguistics. The chairman is Professor John Lyons of Sussex University, and the LAGB representatives are Professor R. B. Le Page of York University and Mr. C. Butler of Nottingham University.
