
CONTRIBUTORS

Donald Bruckner is Assistant Director of Academic Affairs at Penn State New Kensington, where he also teaches philosophy courses. Prudence is the focus of his current research. "A Contractarian Account of (Part of) Prudence" is a companion to the present paper and appears in American Philosophical Quarterly (January 2003).

Thorsten Clausing works as a research assistant at the University of Magdeburg. His main research interest are the foundations of game theory.

D. R. Cox has worked in theoretical statistics and in applications, mostly connected with the natural sciences. From 1967 to 1988 he was Professor of Statistics, Department of Mathematics, Imperial College of Science and Technology and from 1988 until retirement in 1994 Warden, Nuffield College, Oxford. He currently works as an Honorary Fellow at Nuffield College and as an associate member, Department of Statistics, University of Oxford.

Roger E. Backhouse is Professor of the History and Philosophy of Economics in the Department of Economics at the University of Birmingham. He has published on and taught macroeconomics, the history of economics and economic methodology, his main interests being in the history and methodology of modern economics. Recent work includes The Penguin History of Economics (2002); The Ordinary Business of Life (2002); Toward a History of Applied Economics (co-editor with Jeff Biddle) (2000); and Macroeconomics and the Real World (co editor with Andrea Salanti) (2000). He is an Editor of the Journal of Economic Methodology and an Associate Editor of the Journal of the History of Economic Thought.

Francesco Guala is a Lecturer in Philosophy at the University of Exeter. He is interested in philosophical problems arising from scientific practice, especially in the social sciences. He has published extensively in philosophy and economics journals, and is currently preparing a monograph on The Methodology of Experimental Economics.

Andreas Hasman is a D.Phil. student at the Ethox Centre, University of Oxford and a member of Green College, Oxford. His current focus is on resource allocation and priority setting in health care organisations.

Daniel M. Hausman is the Herbert A. Simon Professor in the Department of Philosophy at University of Wisconsin-Madison. He is a former editor of Economics and Philosophy and author of many works on philosophy of economics, including The Inexact and Separate Science of Economics (Cambridge University Press, 1992) and Economic Analysis and Moral Philosophy (with Michael McPherson, Cambridge University Press, 1996).

Louis Kaplow is a Professor of Law at Harvard Law School, a Research Associate at the National Bureau of Economic Research, and a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. His research and publications are in the areas of law and economics, moral philosophy, tax policy, and antitrust. He is currently working on books and articles in economics and philosophy on redistributive taxation and distributive justice.

Christian List is lecturer in Political Science at the London School of Economics. He is the author of a number of articles, including "Are Interpersonal Comparisons of Utility Indeterminate?" (in Erkenntnis, 2003), "Social Choice Theory and Deliberative Democracy: A Reconciliation" (with John Dryzek, in the British Journal of Political Science, 2003), "Aggregating Sets of Judgments: An Impossibility Result" (with Philip Pettit, in Economics and Philosophy, 2002), "Epistemic Democracy: Generalizing the Condorcet Jury Theorem" (with Robert E. Goodin, in the Journal of Political Philosophy, 2001).

Lars Peter Østerdal is a Ph.D. student at the Institute of Economics, University of Copenhagen. He is also affiliated to the Institute of Public Health, University of Copenhagen. His research interests are health economics, game theory and industrial organization.

Fabienne Peter is an Assistant Professor of Economics at the University of Basel and a Fellow at the Max Weber Kolleg at the University of Erfurt. Her research explores issues at the intersection of economics and philosophy, with particular emphasis on normative economics and on the philosophy and methodology of the social sciences. She has recently published "Gender and the Foundations of Social Choice" in the journal Feminist Economics. Public Health, Ethics, and Equity, a volume she has co-edited with Sudhir Anand and Amartya Sen, is forthcoming from Oxford University Press.

Julian Reiss is Senior Researcher at the Centre for Philosophy of Natural and Social Science, London School of Economics, on the AHRB-funded project Causality: Metaphysics and Methods. Apart from causal inference, his research interests are economic methodology, concept formation, thought experiments and history of modern philosophy.

Arthur Ripstein is Professor of Law and Philosophy at the University of Toronto. He is the author of Equality, Responsibility, and the Law (Cambridge University Press, 1999) and is currently working on a book about Kant's legal and political philosophy.

Steven Shavell is the Samuel R. Rosenthal Professor of Law and Economics at Harvard Law School, a Research Associate at the National Bureau of Economic Research, and a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. His research and publications are in the areas of torts, contracts, property, crime, the legal process, and the relationships among law, economics, and moral philosophy. His publications include Economic Analysis of Accident Law (Harvard University Press, 1987) and Foundations of Economic Analysis of Law (Harvard University Press, 2004).

Robert van der Veen (born 1943) is a lecturer in political theory at the University of Amsterdam. His main interests are theories of justice, social policy (with a focus on basic income) and environmental policy. His latest book is Environmental Dilemmas and Policy Design, (Cambridge University Press, 2002; co-author: Huib Pellikaan).