CONTRIBUTORS

Catherine Bradley is a Junior Research Fellow in Music at the Queen's College, Oxford. She completed her doctoral thesis, The Earliest Motets: Musical Borrowing and Re-use, under the supervision of Professor Susan Rankin at the University of Cambridge in 2011.

Emma Hornby is Senior Lecturer in Music at Bristol University. Her previous analytical work on formulaic Mass chants includes Gregorian and Old Roman Eighth-Mode Tracts (Ashgate, 2002) and Medieval Liturgical Chant and Patristic Exegesis (Boydell and Brewer, 2009). The present article grew out of analytical work undertaken in preparation for a forthcoming co-authored monograph (with Rebecca Maloy), Paths through the Passion: Interlectionary chants in the Old Hispanic liturgy.

Renata Pieragostini completed her M.Phil. and Ph.D. in Historical Musicology at the University of Cambridge (King's College) and subsequently held a Junior Research Fellowship at St Anne's College, Oxford. She is currently a Visiting Scholar at Indiana University, and in April 2013 will take up a temporary lectureship at the University of Cambridge. Her research interests include the music of late medieval Italy and England and the role of music in medieval thought and learning.
