FROM THE EDITORIAL OFFICE

The Editorial Board thanks Sam Black for his years of service to the Journal, and welcomes Rahul Kumar as a new member of the Editorial Board.

This past year CJP received 217 papers, with an acceptance rate of 4.6%.

Most papers are sent anonymously to two expert external referees. When papers are sent to referees, the Journal aims at a six month response time for the author. For papers not sent for external review, the Journal aims at a three month response time for authors.

All papers are given an initial anonymous review in the editorial office. Promising papers are sent to an editor in their area, who may then send them (anonymously) to two referees. Papers with two strong referees' reports and the endorsement of the editor are sent to the editorial board as a whole, still anonymously, for discussion and a vote on acceptance. The current backlog of accepted papers is currently about six months.

Because of the number of papers it receives, CJP is normally able to consider papers of no longer than 10,000 words. Longer papers may be returned to authors with a suggestion to shorten them or to submit them elsewhere.

CJP is now available through a variety of electronic aggregators, some for profit and some not for profit. In terms of revenue, it matters greatly to the Journal how we are accessed electronically through libraries, with nonprofit aggregators like Project Muse and JSTOR offering us the best revenue sharing arrangements.

In the future, it is our view that scholars and libraries will need to pay more attention to how they are receiving and using journals in electronic form, particularly independent journals like CJP.

CJP is also available at its own website, on an open access model, but with a twenty-four month embargo on current content to protect our revenues from other sources:

<http://www.canadianjournalofphilosophy.com>

Almost all authors are now submitting their papers electronically. This enables us to process papers more quickly, within the constraints mentioned above. Papers should be sent to Marda Schindeler, the Journal's Executive Secretary, at cjp@uleth.ca, in either Word or WordPerfect (native and RFT file format), and formatted according to the Journal's directions for authors.
