

THE JOURNAL OF POLAR HISTORY

In December of 1983, Polaris Publications will begin issuing The Journal of Polar History. This semi-annual periodical is dedicated to man's relentless quest to both explore and define the polar seas and regions.

The journal is a juxtaposition of original research papers, unpublished holographs and manuscripts, reprints of rare documents, magazine and newspaper articles, pamphlets and short books, as well as other interesting and significant polar ephemera. In addition, and within its international scope, the field's leading archival, library and photo collections, as well as noteworthy antiquarian book and map dealers and collectors will be profiled. Also slated for inclusion in its various departments are book reviews, interviews, poetry, and English translations of rare or scarce materials relevant to polar bibliography.

Institutional acquisition heads, book collectors and researchers seeking data or materials for their collections or projects are encouraged to submit a brief description for a year's gratis inclusion.

Contributors to the journal should submit papers pertaining solely to the social sciences. The journal seeks to provide an unprejudiced forum for historical dialogue and debate as well as to stimulate an increased international awareness and original research in the history of the Arctic and Antarctic. Although the journal is essentially scholarly, it intends to be entertaining. It is hoped that original submissions of a minimum length of 2500 words will be both quantitative and qualitative enough as to permit at least ten such articles to be published in each issue. The contributors of the journal's first ten major articles (2500 + words) shall receive a free lifetime subscription to the journal. Short pieces (500 + words) are also encouraged.

The Journal of Polar History will be printed to meet or exceed archival standards and offers the following introductory subscription rates:

One year: Fifty dollars (US $50)

Three years: One hundred dollars (US $100)

Lifetime: Five hundred dollars (US $500)

(The lifetime offer is good for 1983 only)

Commercial advertising rates will be established this summer.
