The Institute of Contemporary History, 4 Devonshire Street, London w.1, is publishing a "Catalogue of Work in Progress in Contemporary European History," as a supplement to the Journal of Contemporary History. Of the 132 projects listed in the first issue, more than half deal with German or Austrian history, if studies dealing with occupation and resistance during World War II are included. Scholars are invited to report their projects, including a brief description of the theme and of the main sources, to the Institute.

The 1966 List of National Archives Microfilm Publications and its August 1967 Supplement provide a good picture of the quantity of materials relating to Germany available in this form. Publications from the World War II Collection of Seized Enemy Records (excluding Italian and Russian materials) now total over twenty thousand rolls—nearly two million feet of film, or about fifteen million pages of documents. The total cost is a little over $150,000. Publications range in size from the Records of the German Foreign Office Received by the Department of State (5162 rolls) through the Seeckt and Groener papers (now once more available) to correspondence of Herbert von Bismarck (one roll), and in time from papers of Gneisenau and Boyen to the end of World War II. A useful feature of this listing is the inclusion of references to finding aids, including those available only on microfilm. Other publications of interest come from the World War II War Crimes Records and from the records of the Department of State.
