

Activities

Richard Pierre Claude, professor emeritus of government and politics, University of Maryland, lectured this spring at The Hebrew University in Jerusalem as a guest of the Harry S. Truman International Institute of Peace. Addressing the Life Sciences faculty, he discussed his research on "Scientists' Rights and the Right to the Benefits of Science." Professor Claude's travel was supported by the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Russell Farnen, professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut, has been appointed editor of the journal Politics, Groups, and the Individual.

Daniel S. Geller, professor of political science, University of Mississippi, has been selected as a William C. Foster Fellow by the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. He will be a visiting scholar at ACDA from June 1998 through May 1999.

Douglas A. Hibbs Jr., professor, department of economics, Goteborg University, has been elected president of the European Public Choice Society for 1998-99

Sheldon W. Simon, professor of political science, Arizona State University, has been named director of Southeast Asian research for The National Bureau of Asian Research in Seattle. Under a grant from the Jackson Foundation through NBAR, Simon was in Southeast Asia this past summer conducting a study of how the region's economic crisis is affecting strategies among ASEAN states.

Denis J. Sullivan, associate professor, department of political science, Northeastern University, will return to the department after spending the past fifteen months as special assistant to the university president.

Administrative Appointments

John Brandl, dean, Hubert H. Humphrey Institute of Public Affairs, University of Minnesota.

Michael Harris, interim department head, department of political science, Eastern Michigan University.

Richard Paul Heil, chair, department of political science and justice studies, Fort Hays State University.

Neil Kerwin, provost, American University.

Martin C. Needler, executive director, Northern California International Studies Consortium, St. Mary's College (CA).

Steven M. Neuse, chair, department of political science, University of Arkansas.

Clifford Staten, dean, social sciences, Indiana University, Southeast.

New Appointments

Anne M. Bennett, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Nevada, Las Vegas.

Michele Tracy Berger, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Nevada, Las Vegas.

Sarah Binder, assistant professor of political science, George Washington University.

Barry C. Burden, assistant professor, department of political science, Louisiana State University.

Katrina Burgess, assistant professor, department of political science, Maxwell School of Citizenship, Syracuse University.

FOR THE RECORD

Prewitt Nominated as Census Bureau Director

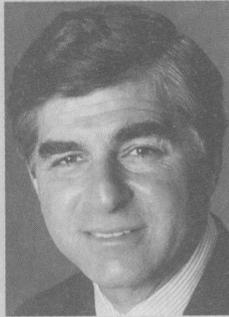

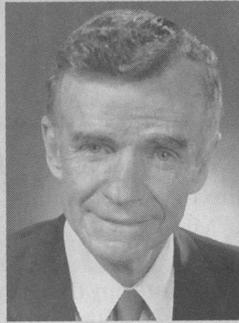

Kenneth Prewitt, president of Social Sciences Research Council, has been nominated as the next director of the Census Bureau. The nomination is subject to Senate confirmation, and it's unlikely that any hearings will be scheduled until 1999.

Prewitt, two time president of the SSRC (1979-85 and 1995-present), has also served as a senior vice president at the Rockefeller Foundation and as director of the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago. He was instrumental in the founding of the Consortium of Social Science Associations. During his time at Chicago, Prewitt was also a professor of political science and chair of the political science department. He received his Ph.D. from Stanford in 1963, and holds degrees from Southern Methodist University, Washington University, and the Harvard Divinity School. Although he has extensive experience conducting and coordinating large statistical studies, he admits "I've never run anything of the scale" of the Census Bureau.

If confirmed, Prewitt would be responsible for the 2000 Census. Always controversial, the Census has received more attention than usual from House Republicans who object to the proposed use of sampling to avoid the undercounts identified in previous Censuses. Prewitt has not stated his opinion on sampling.

The position of Census Bureau director has been vacant since the end of January when Dr. Martha Farnsworth Riche stepped down.

Thomas R. Dye, formerly McKenzie Professor of Government at Florida State University, has been appointed president of the Lincoln Center for Public Service, a nonprofit civic and education organization serving Florida and the nation. Dye is former president of the Southern Political Science Association and the Policy Studies Organization.

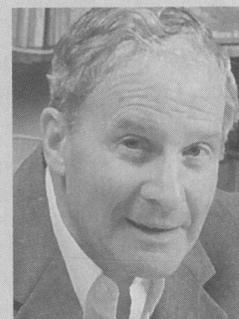

Michael S. Dukakis, university distinguished professor, Northeastern University, received the Massachusetts chapter of the American Society for Public Administration's President's Award in recognition of his public service.

Janet M. Kelly, assistant professor and director of the Master of Public Administration Program at Clemson University, has been named the Region Five Representative to the National Council of the American Society of Public Administration. Her term runs from 1998–2000. Kelly is a graduate of Syracuse University and received her Ph.D. in 1992 from Wayne State University.

Joseph McCormick Jr., associate professor, department of political science, Howard University, has been selected president-elect of the National Conference of Black Political Scientists for 1998–99. A scholar of African-American political behavior and environmental policy analysis, McCormick earned his Ph.D. from the University of Pittsburgh in 1979.

Harry M. Clor, professor of political science at Kenyon College, has been named the first incumbent of the Distinguished Teaching Professorship in Political Science at Kenyon. The initiative for the position was taken by a number of Clor's former students who sought to recognize him for his influence on their lives. Clor will hold the position until his retirement and, thereafter, the position will be known as the Harry M. Clor Professorship in Political Science. A scholar of political philosophy, as well as censorship and free-speech issues, Clor joined the faculty at Kenyon in 1965 after completing his doctoral studies at the University of Chicago.

Roderic A. Camp, professor, department of government, Claremont McKenna College.

Brandice Canes, assistant professor, department of political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Thomas Christensen, associate professor, department of political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Renee de Nevers, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

Aimee Franklin, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

Rebecca Martin Hendrick, associate professor, public administration, College of Urban Planning and Public Affairs, University of Illinois, Chicago.

Mark S. Hurwitz, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Utah.

Judson Jeffries, assistant professor, department of political science, Purdue University.

Thomas M. Keck, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

Kristin A. Kelly, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut.

Mark Kemper, assistant professor of political science, Miami University (OH).

Roger Laroca, assistant professor, department of political science, Purdue University.

Regina Lawrence, assistant professor, department of political science, Maxwell School of Citizenship, Syracuse University.

Chappell Lawson, assistant professor, department of political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Martin A. Nie, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Pittsburgh, Bradford.

Mitchell Orenstein, assistant professor, department of political science, Maxwell School of Citizenship, Syracuse University.

Jos Raadschelders, associate professor, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

Lyle A. Scruggs, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut.

Christine LeVeaux Sharpe, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Houston.

Greg Shaw, assistant professor, department of political science, Illinois Wesleyan University.

Jill L.J. Tao, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

Brian D. Taylor, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Oklahoma.

Gerald Thomas, assistant professor, department of political science, Purdue University.

Hongying Wang, assistant professor, department of political science, Maxwell School of Citizenship, Syracuse University.

Bruce Wilson, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Central Florida.

M. Hakan Yavuz, assistant professor, department of political science and the Middle East Center, University of Utah.

Catherine Heldt Zuckert, professor, department of government, University of Notre Dame; formerly Carleton College.

Michael Zuckert, professor, department of political science, University of Notre Dame; formerly Carleton College.

Promotions

Patricia Boling, associate professor, department of political science, Purdue University.

Ellen Carnaghan, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Saint Louis University.

Joshua Foa Dienstag, associate professor with tenure, department of government and foreign affairs, University of Virginia.

George Douglas Dion, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Purdue University.

Mary Durfee, associate professor with tenure, department of social sciences, Michigan Technological University.

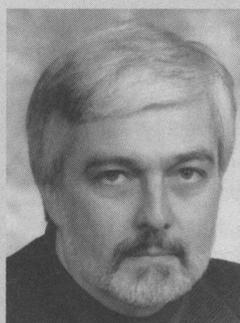

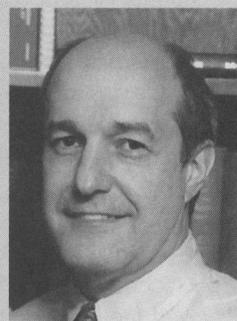

Ruth Ann Strickland of the department of political science and criminal justice at Appalachian State University has been promoted to the rank of professor. Strickland is director of the M.A. program at Appalachian State and teaches courses in judicial process, American government, and introduction to political science. She joined the department in 1988.

K.C. Morrison, professor of political science at the University of Missouri, Columbia and president of the National Conference of Black Political Scientists during 1998–99. A scholar focusing on politics of Africa and African-American politics and culture, Morrison delivered his presidential address at the 1998 NCOBPS annual meeting in Atlanta.

Margaret G. Hermann, recently joined the department of political science at the Maxwell School of Citizenship of Syracuse University. Most recently on the faculty at Ohio State University, she is the author of numerous articles on political leadership and its impact on foreign policy. She is currently president of the International Studies Association.

Ronald M. Peters Jr., has been named Regents Professor of Political Science at the University of Oklahoma. A scholar specializing in political theory and American government, Peters is chair of the political science department and director and curator of the Carl Albert Congressional Research and Studies Center. He is author of The American Speakership: The Office in Historical Perspective.

Terence Ball has joined the department of political science at Arizona State University at the rank of professor. A long-time faculty member at the University of Minnesota, Ball is a scholar of political theory. His most recent book is Reappraising Political Theory (Oxford University Press, 1995). He is currently working on a book-length project with Richard Dagger on American militia movements. Ball is a graduate of the University of California, Santa Cruz and received his Ph.D. from the University of California, Berkeley in 1973.

Minton F. Goldman, professor, department of political science, Northeastern University (OH).

Patrick Haney, associate professor of political science with tenure, Miami University (OH).

Michael Harris, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Eastern Michigan University.

Peter M. Haas, professor, department of political science, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Jeanne A.K. Hey, associate professor of political science and international studies with tenure, Miami University (OH).

Richard P. Hiskies, professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut.

Rhonda Kinney, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Eastern Michigan University.

Daniel Kryder, associate professor, department of political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Adrian Lottie, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Eastern Michigan University.

William G. Mayer, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, Northeastern University.

Eileen L. McDonagh, professor, department of political science, Northeastern University.

William H. Miller, associate professor with tenure, University of Arkansas.

Steven M. Neuse, professor, University of Arkansas.

M.J. Peterson, professor, department of political science, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Yanqi Tong, associate professor with tenure, department of political science, University of Utah.

Nicholas Xenos, professor, department of political science, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Quansheng Zhao, professor, School of International Service, American University.

Cyrus Ernesto Zirakzadeh, professor, department of political science, University of Connecticut.

Retirements

William Campbell, professor of political science, Miami University (OH).

Alan Engel, professor of political science, Miami University (OH).

Daniel Jacobs, professor of political science, Miami University (OH).

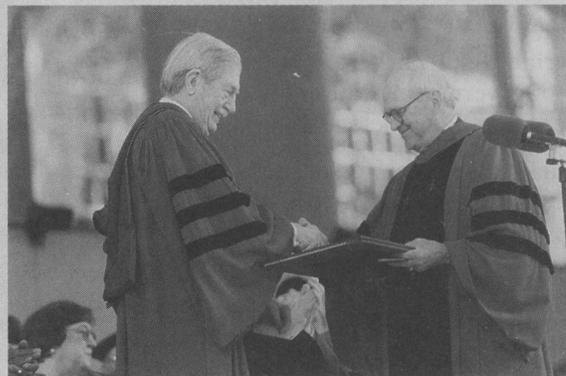

Martin C. Needler, dean, School of International Studies, University of the Pacific.

Herbert Waltzer, professor of political science, Miami University (OH).

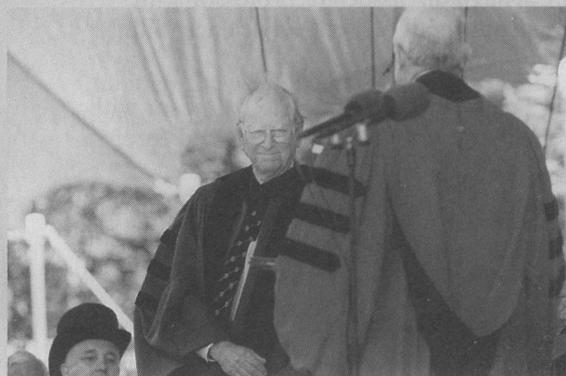

Harvard Honors Beer and Dahl

Former APSA Presidents Samuel H. Beer (1977) and Robert A. Dahl (1967) were conferred honorary Doctor of Law degrees at the 347th commencement exercises of Harvard University on June 4. Eaton Professor of the Science of Government Emeritus at Harvard, Beer is a distinguished scholar of British politics and American federalism whose works include Modern British Politics (1965), for which he received APSA's 1966 Woodrow Wilson Foundation Award. Educated at the University of Michigan, Oxford University, and Harvard (where he received the Ph.D. in 1943), he taught in Harvard's Department of Government until his retirement in 1981. He received the Harvard University Centennial Medal in 1990.

A leading theorist of democracy, Dahl is Sterling Professor Emeritus of Political Science at Yale University. His book, Who Governs?, won the Wilson Award in 1962 and was described in the Times Literary Supplement in 1995 as one of "the hundred most influential books since the war." In 1990, he again received the Wilson prize, this time for Democracy and Its Critics. Dahl was also named the inaugural winner of the Association's James Madison Award in 1978.

Beer (top) and Dahl receive their honorary degrees from University Marshall Richard Hunt. (Photos courtesy of Harvard University)

Visiting and Temporary Positions

Archie Brown, Kellogg fellow, University of Notre Dame.

Greg Gunderson, visiting assistant professor, department of political science, Illinois Wesleyan University.

David Pfeiffer, resident scholar, Hawaii University Affiliated Program on Disabilities, visiting scholar, department of political science, University of Hawaii, Manoa.

Vincent Kelly Pollard, adjunct faculty member, Kansai Gaidai Hawaii College (Honolulu).

Linda White, visiting assistant professor, department of political science, Purdue University.

Quansheng Zhao, visiting professor, Aoyama Gakuin University, Japan.

Awards

Hoover Institution Announces National Fellows for 1998–99

The Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace at Stanford University named its 1998–99 class of fellows in April. The fellowships, open to junior scholars in the United States and Canada, provide recipients the opportunity to spend a year conducting independent research on current or historical public policy issues. The 1999 Fellows from political science are:

Victor D. Cha, National Fellow, assistant professor, department of government, Georgetown University, “Alliance Resiliency or Termination in the Post-Cold War: The United States and Korea.”

David L. Epstein, National Fellow, associate professor, department of political science, Columbia University, “The Impact of Minority-Majority Voting Districts on Substantive Representation.”

Xiabobo Lu, National Fellow, assistant professor, department of political science, Barnard College, Columbia University, “Bureaucracy and Economic Transition: The Political Economy of Market Regulation in China and Russia.”

Daniel S. Treisman, National Fellow, department of political science, University of California, Los Angeles, “Political and Economic Consequences of Decentralization in States Around the World.”

Edward D. Mansfield, Peace Fellow, associate professor, department of political science, Ohio State University, “Democratization and War.”

SSRC Names Eurasia Fellows

The Eurasia Program of the Social Science Research Council awarded fellowships to the following political scientists.

Dissertation Fellows

Katherine Burns, Ph.D. candidate in political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, “Subnational Power and International Cooperation: The Russian Far East and its Northeast Asian Neighbors.”

Keith Darden, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of California, Berkeley, “From Economic Myth to Institutional Reality: The Creation of New Forms of Regional Order in the Former Soviet Union.”

Katherine Graney, Ph.D. candidate in political science, University of Wisconsin, Madison, “Projecting Sovereignty: Post-Soviet Statehood.”

Adriana Petryna, Ph.D. candidate, University of California, Berkeley. “The Technical and Political Administration of Life After Chernobyl: Science, Sovereignty, and Citizenship in a Post-Cold War Era.”

Postdoctoral Fellows

Timothy Frye, assistant professor, department of political science, Ohio State University, “The Politics of Post-Communist Legal Reform.”

Michael Gorham, assistant professor, department of geography, University of Florida, “Speaking in Tongues: The Language Culture of Early Soviet Russia.”

Judyth Twigg, assistant professor of political science, Virginia Commonwealth University, “Following the Doctor’s Orders? Path Dependence and Impediments to Reform of Russia’s Health Care System.”

Woodrow Wilson Center Announces Fellows for 1998–99

The Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars named 21 fellows for the 1998–99 academic year. The residential fellowships, given in memory of President Wilson’s scholarly and public policy concerns, provide a year of assistance for scholars from all social science and humanities disciplines to pursue research projects resulting in publications. The political scientists receiving fellowships this year are:

Larry S. Berman, professor of political science, University of California, Davis, “Imperfect Peace: America’s Disengagement from Vietnam.”

Mark A. Graber, associate professor of government, University of Maryland, “A Political History of Judicial Review.”

G. John Ikenberry, associate professor of political science, University of Pennsylvania, “Strategies of Engagement: America and the Liberal Pursuit of International Order.”

John A. Rohr, professor of public administration, Virginia Tech, “Public Administration as Constitutional Governance: A Comparative Study in Institutional Legitimacy.”

Other Awards

Walter E. Beach, senior fellow, Helen Dwight Reid Education Foundation, was presented the inaugural Elizabeth J. Sommers Award from Mount Vernon College (DC) in recognition and appreciation of his vision, integrity, and selfless service to women’s education. Beach is a former member of the Mount Vernon Board of Trustees, including service as vice chairman of the board and chairman of the Boards' Executive Committee.

Terrence C. Casey, George Washington University, won the British Politics Group's inaugural Donald E. Stokes Dissertation Fellowship. Cassey will use the award to complete research on "Industry and Institutions: Economic Change and Social Context in Conservative Britain."

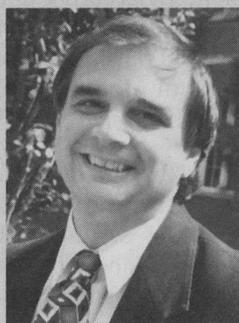

Timothy Lomperis, professor and chair, department of political science, Saint Louis University, won the Alpha Sigma Nu National Jesuit Book Award for the best book published in the social sciences at a Jesuit institution between 1994 and 1997. He received the award for From People's War to People's Rule: Insurgency, Intervention, and the Lessons of Vietnam (University of North Carolina Press, 1996).

David R. Morgan, professor, University of Oklahoma, was one of the recipients of the 1998 Donald C. Sone Award, given annually by the American Society of Public Administration in recognition of "distinguished contributions to the area of intergovernmental relations and management."

Harvey Starr, Dag Hammarskjold Professor in International Affairs, University of South Carolina, was the 1998 recipient of the Russell Award for Research in Humanities and Social Science. The award is given each year by the University of South Carolina in recognition of outstanding research and scholarship.

David Alistari Yalof, assistant professor, University of Connecticut, has been named the winner of the prize for the Best Dissertation on the Presidency given by the Center for Presidential Studies in the George Bush School of Government and Public Service at Texas A&M University. Professor Yalof's dissertation, "Choosing Supreme Court Nominees: Selection Politics from Truman to Reagan," which was completed at Johns Hopkins University, was selected for the prize because it "adds significantly to our understanding of presidential selection of Supreme Court nominees."

Mohammed Ayoob, university distinguished professor of international relations, Michigan State University, has received a grant from the Human Rights and International Cooperation Unit of the Ford Foundation to continue research on "International Relations Theory and the Third World."

Lawrence C. Dodd, Manning J. Dauer Eminent Scholar in Political Science at the University of Florida, received the university's Superior Achievement Award. The award was presented in recognition of Dodd's efforts to restructure the graduate program in political science, his creation and funding of an invited lecturers series, and his "energy and creativity in providing the leadership . . . to build the political science department."

Pamela K. Jensen, professor of political science at Kenyon College, received the college's Trustees' Award for Distinguished Teaching. The award is reserved for faculty who have taught at the college for more than ten years. A scholar of political philosophy, she was a contributing editor to Finding a New Feminism: Rethinking the Woman Question for Liberal Democracy.

Morris Fiorina, Professor of Political Science at Stanford University, was elected to the National Academy of Sciences in the Spring of 1998. A scholar of American politics, he has authored numerous articles on electoral and legislative politics. Membership in the Academy is extended to scientists or engineers and is considered one of the highest honors a scholar can receive.

Gary King, professor in the department of government at Harvard University, was inducted into the American Academy of Arts and Sciences in April. Election to the Academy recognizes significant contributions to science and scholarship. Director of the Harvard-MIT Data Center, King is the author of A Solution to the Ecological Inference Problem: Reconstructing Individual Behavior from Aggregate Data (Princeton University Press, 1997).

Alexander George, professor emeritus of political science at Stanford University, became the fourth person, and the first specialist in foreign policy, to receive the Johan Skytte Prize in Political Science, which is given annually by Sweden's University of Uppsala to "the scholar who has made the most valuable contribution to political science." The prize, which includes a stipend of 400,000 Krona (about $50,000), was given in recognition of George's "pathbreaking analysis of statecraft, its possibilities and limits, performed with great sensitivity for the importance of judgment, reasoned argumentation, and responsible leadership in foreign policy decision making."

Mary Ann Tetreault, department of political science at Iowa State University, received the 1997 Sophonisba Breckenridge Award for the best paper about women and politics presented at the 1997 Midwest Political Science Association annual meeting for "Justice for All: Wartime Rape and Women's Human Rights." The prize is awarded annually by the Midwest Committee on the Status of Women in the Profession.

Robert C. Smith, professor of political science at San Francisco State University, received the 1998 Distinguished Alumni Award from the Graduate School of Howard University. A 1975 Ph.D. graduate from Howard, Smith is a scholar of American politics, with a concentration on race and politics. Smith joined the faculty of San Francisco State in 1989.

David R. Morgan, professor in the department of political science at the University of Oklahoma, was one of the recipients of the 1998 Donald C. Stone Award by the American Society of Public Administration. Awarded annually, the prize is given in recognition of "distinguished contributions to the area of intergovernmental relations and management."

Robert Henry Cox, associate professor in the department of political science at the University of Oklahoma, has been named one of nine German Marshall Fund Fellows for 1998-99. During the fellowship period, Cox will be affiliated with the University of Tübingen, where he will complete research for a project titled "From Safety Net to Trampoline: The New Welfare States of Northern Europe."

Larry Berman, professor of political science at the University of California, Davis is the recipient of two national awards. During the month of September, Berman will serve a Rockefeller Foundation Residency Fellowship in Bellagio, Italy. In addition, Berman has been named a Woodrow Wilson Center Fellow for the 1998-99 academic year. During that time he will serve as a scholar in residence at the Wilson Center for Scholars in Washington, DC, and write a new book, Imperfect Place, about the ending of the Vietnam War.

Michael Brint, associate professor of humane letters, Kenyon College, received the college's Trustees' Award for Distinguished Teaching reserved for faculty who have taught at the college for less than ten years.

Archie Brown, professor of politics, Oxford University, was awarded the W.J.M. Mackenzie Prize of the Political Studies Association of the United Kingdom in April 1998 for "the best book in political science of 1996." The award was for The Gorbachev Factor (Oxford University Press, 1996).

Ellen Carnaghan, associate professor, Saint Louis University, received her university's 1997-1998 Outstanding Teaching Award for Social Sciences.

Richard A. Couto, professor, Jepson School, University of Richmond, was named Professor of the Year by Omicron Delta Kappa, a national honorary society for leadership.

Michael Harris, department of political science, Eastern Michigan University, was awarded the university's Distinguished Faculty Award.

Donald Kommers, professor, department of government, University of Notre Dame, received an honorary doctorate of laws from the University of Heidelberg in Germany.

Gil Loescher, professor, department of government, University of Notre Dame, received a research grant from the United States Institute of Peace.

Michael A. Morris, professor of political science, Clemson University, received the Senior Scholar Research Award for 1997-1998 from the university's College of Business and Public Affairs.

Melissa A. Orlie, associate professor of political science, University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign, has been awarded the 1997-98 Clarence H. Berdahl Award for Excellence in Undergraduate Teaching by the University of Illinois chapter of Pi Sigma Alpha.

Ken Oye, professor, department of political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, received the 1998 Graduate Student Council Award for the university's School of Humanities and Social Science.

Patricia Patterson, assistant professor, department of political science, University of Richmond, was one of five faculty members named "Outstanding Educators" for 1997-98.

Michael Piore, professor, department of political science, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, received an honorary doctorate from the University of Lille in France.

David A. Rochefort, professor, department of political science, Northeastern University, received his university's Excellence in Teaching Award.

Edward Sidlow, professor, department of political science, Eastern Michigan University, was awarded a mini-sabbatical for the spring and summer semesters of 1998.

Ruth Ann Strickland, professor of political science and criminal justice, Appalachian State University, was one of four faculty members inducted into the Academy of Outstanding Teachers in the university's College of Arts and Sciences.

J. David Woodward, professor of political science, Clemson University, won his university's 1998 Fluor Daniel Excellence-in-Teaching Award.

Kudos

James L. Gibson, a Cullen Distinguished Professor in the political science department of the University of Houston, has won the Esther Farfel Award, the highest honor given by the university to a member of its faculty. The award is given for outstanding achievements in research, service, and teaching.

Gibson, who is an expert in judicial politics, political parties, democratization, comparative politics, and public opinion, has published widely. According to Arthur H. Miller, creator of the Professional Visibility Index for Political Science, "when the impact of his work is taken into consideration, [Gibson] is one of the most visible political scientists in the world."

An active member of the Association, Gibson is a former member of the APSA Council and APSR Editorial Board, and is currently a member of the Committee on International Programs. Earlier in 1998, he was named president-elect for the Midwest Political Science Association and will serve his term as president in 1999. Gibson is a member of the Law and Society Association and a frequent reviewer for the National Science Foundation. He has also served his university in many capacities, most recently as a member of the Faculty Senate and the Research Council.

A graduate of Emory University, Gibson completed his Ph.D. in 1975 at the University of Iowa. A member of Phi Beta Kappa, he taught at the University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee before joining the faculty at Houston in 1983. Gibson teaches undergraduate and graduate courses in judicial process, law, research methods, and public opinion.