Introduction of Honorary Fellows

Professor Leon Eisenberg was unable to attend the Annual Meeting in July 1985 and was presented at this meeting.

Professor L. Eisenberg (introduced by Professor I. Kolvin)
Professor Leon Eisenberg is renowned for an extraordinary range of accomplishments. He is, to borrow an archaism, the complete psychiatrist.

Leon Eisenberg's considerable promise was recognised at an early stage by one of the founding fathers of modern child psychiatry, Professor Leo Kanner. The qualities Kanner recognised in the young Eisenberg were those of a true intellectual, a superb communicator and an excellent capacity for clinical research. It is true that to a certain extent most of us are moulded by our teachers and it is not surprising that, reared in the invigorating climate of Johns Hopkins, Eisenberg absorbed into his life and work all the strengths of scientific discipline in clinical and research practice. Within a decade, he was a full Professor at Johns Hopkins and a colleague and collaborator of Leo Kanner. This potential was more widely recognised when soon he was elected as Chairman of the Child Psychiatry Section of the American Psychiatric Association. However, the horizons of a sub-specialty proved too narrow for someone of Leon Eisenberg's breadth of vision and ability. When I met him 17 years ago he was in his mid forties and by that time he had been a full Professor for eight years, six of them in Child Psychiatry at Johns Hopkins and two as Professor and Chairman in General Psychiatry at the Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston. By 1980 his immense talent allowed him to switch yet again to become Professor and Chairman of the Social Medicine Department at Harvard University Medical School. He has been on the editorial board of about a dozen major journals covering child and general psychiatry, psychosomatics, paediatrics and social medicine and for 10 years was the editor of the Journal of Orthopsychiatry. His considerable talent led to great demands on his time from both the World Health Organization and the National Institute of Health and, of course, from many other bodies both in North America and Europe. Despite these many commitments he has over 200 publications, the following themes being particularly prominent: social deprivation; social factors in the major psychoses and mental handicap, psychiatric and general health care and prevention of ill health in different cultures; intelligence, race and class and psychopharmacology. In child psychiatry his interests have been in the psychoses, school phobia, behaviour disorders and hyperkinesis; adolescent problems and suicide. Recently he has shown an interest in the future of psychiatric research.

What about the man himself? Leon Eisenberg has always concerned himself with social and practical issues in his research. Over his career he has tended to identify with socially important but often politically unpopular themes, such as 'Prevention—a political slogan or an attainable goal?' He is an exciting personality, always bubbling over with enthusiasm for new ideas. In Boston he has played a major role in integrating the different branches of psychiatry at the Massachusetts General Hospital and Harvard University. In that exercise he has always encouraged a broad eclectic philosophy. Just as his own career was promoted by Kanner, he in turn has helped to realise the aspirations of the bright trainees who have flocked to sit at his feet and at all times he has proved responsive to their needs. In private one quickly becomes aware of his vast knowledge of the arts and literature. He is one of those lucky individuals who proves to be not only professionally successful but also a marvellous raconteur with a lively sense of humour. These many qualities and achievements have been honoured in many ways, even in the United Kingdom. He was, for instance, awarded an honorary DSc in Manchester in 1974 and a Burroughs Wellcome Royal Society of Medicine Visiting Professorship in 1982. Recently our College added to these signs of international recognition. The College has welcomed one of the most complete and wise of the leaders of our profession to our Fellowship of Psychiatrists. President, it is with great pleasure I present to you, Professor Leon Eisenberg.
