On the cover: A 1900 map of late-nineteenth-century West Indian hurricanes prepared by E.B. Garriott, the head of the U.S. Weather Bureau's forecasting division. As Jamie Pietruska describes in this issue, the American meteorological infrastructure in the Caribbean grew from its more narrowly military origins into an important part of an imperial effort to impose a scientific and bureaucratic order on the region. From E.B. Garriott, West Indian Hurricanes (Washington, D.C.: Weather Bureau, 1900).
