The Constitution, Law, and American Life Critical Aspects of the Nineteenth-Century Experience

Edited by Donald G. Nieman

The eight essays collected in this volume explore the interrelationship between law and society in nineteenth-century America. The issues addressed include slavery and the legal system, the uses made of the law by women and blacks, the law and social deviance, and the relation between law and urbanization.

$35.00 cloth

The State, Law and Religion Pagan Rome

Alan Watson

Alan Watson examines the apparent paradox that Roman private law is remarkably secular even though, until the second century B.C., the Romans were seen as the most religious people in the world. Watson traces the paradox to a class dispute in the mid-fifth century B.C. and the preparation of the Twelve Tables, which resulted from that dispute.

$30.00 cloth

Toward a Usable Past Liberty Under State Constitutions

Edited by Paul Finkelman and Stephen E. Gottlieb

Taking a broad historical perspective, this collection of essays examines the protection afforded individual rights by state constitutional law. The topics range from religion in schools during the Federalist era to criminal justice in the late nineteenth century, from racial integration in Kansas before Brown v. Board of Education to legal battles over birth control in the Connecticut Supreme Court.

The Nature of Copyright A Law of Users' Rights

L. Ray Patterson and Stanley W. Lindberg

"[The authors] draw on history, principle, and policy to show how copyright should first assist those—all of us—who use works of authorship, second those who create them, and third (a distant third) those who market the galaxy of protected works."—Ralph S. Brown, Yale Law School

Arming Military Justice

Volume I: The Origins of the United States
Court of Military Appeals, 1775–1950

Jonathan Lurie

Why must military justice be different from civilian justice? How different should it be? And to what extent should it be influenced or administered by civilian participants? These are the broad topics addressed by Jonathan Lurie's comprehensive history of the development of appellate review of military justice in the United States.

Predating federal district courts by more than a decade, the courts-martial established by the Continental Congress in 1776 were among the first tribunals authorized by the United States. Lurie tells the story of how Congress finally created a civilian appellate court, the Court of Military Appeals, to sit at the top of this military justice system. Why it chose to do so in 1950, with the enactment of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, rather than at an earlier date, is a central theme of his book.

"This is the first comprehensive history of military justice appellate review. Lurie has mined many new basic source materials on the reform movements following World War I and II and the drafting history of ensuing military justice reforms. He handles the legal issues with understanding and the political issues with appreciation for the process and the time."

Constitutional History of the American Revolution

The Authority to Legislate

John Phillip Reid

The third installment in a planned four-volume work, The Authority to Legislate discusses constitutional issues that contributed to the American Revolution. Reid examines both the particular legislation enacted by the British Parliament with regard to the American Colonies and the debate over the constitutionality of that legislation. The first thorough analysis of the legal theories put forward in support of Parliament's authority to legislate, this volume also examines the specific precedents cited as evidence of that authority. Reid shows that defense of the rule of law was central to the American Revolution.

Set No Limits

A Rebuttal to Daniel Callahan's Proposal to Limit Health Care for the Elderly

Robert L. Barry, O.P., and Gerard V. Bradley

With a prologue by Nat Hentoff

Can we put a price tag on life without devaluing it? Can we decide for someone else that life isn't always good and death isn't always bad? Should life be judged only by its "quality"? Are the elderly worth the cost of their own health care?

These and other tough questions are raised in Set No Limits, which cogently challenges age-based rationing schemes of the type proposed by Daniel Callahan in his highly publicized book Setting Limits.

The founder and director of the Hastings Center, the nation's leading bioethics center and an institution whose policies often have been accepted as doctrine by the American Medical Association, Callahan has asserted that all medical care and treatment should be denied the elderly when they reach the end of their "natural life span," somewhere around—even before—80 years of age.

Set No Limits charges that such rationing would be unjust and profoundly biased. The contributors criticize the proposal from legal, economic, philosophical, medical, and religious perspectives. There is a thorough and unflinching critique of a concept that could become standard medical practice, as the U.S. health care establishment attempts to deal with ever increasing medical expenses.

"With the discussion prompted by Callahan's book, as well as the Cruzan case, this is a timely subject. The essays collected here are thoughtful and very well written. This should prove to be a valuable book not only for the general readership in medical ethics, but especially for classroom use." — F. Russell Hittinger. $22.95
