Thirty-eighth Annual Meeting of the American Political Science Association. The problems of government in war-time will occupy a major part of the program of the thirty-eighth annual meeting of the American Political Science Association. The meeting will give public officials—among them several hundred former professors and instructors in political science and members of the Association—an opportunity to discuss with their college and university colleagues the urgent problems of policy and administration in our war-time government and the various plans that are being considered for the post-war world.

The meeting will be held in Chicago, December 28–30, in conjunction with the meeting of the American Society for Public Administration on December 27–28. Several joint sessions of the two societies will be held on December 28. As in former annual meetings, the programs of both societies will include both governmental officials and teachers and researchers in the fields of public opinion, public policy, law, international relations, and administration.

A number of members of the Association have inquired whether the annual meeting should not be cancelled in view of transportation difficulties. This question has been discussed by the President of the Association, the Secretary-Treasurer, the Chairman of the Program Committee, and the Editor of the Review, who have sought the advice of leading public officials and officers of comparable associations. While the Office of Defense Transportation is discouraging large conventions held for social or entertainment purposes, no opposition whatever has been expressed to meetings which bring together those concerned with public affairs for the discussion of governmental policy and administration. On the contrary, meetings which afford opportunity for students of government and public officials to confer are looked upon as essential conferences and useful in the furtherance of the war effort. The officers of the Association are assured that they will be informed if the situation should change so radically that the Association’s meeting would impair the war effort. In such a case, the meeting would be cancelled immediately and all members of the Association would be notified at once in writing.

On December 28, the birthday of Woodrow Wilson, who was president of the American Political Science Association in 1910, two general sessions of special interest will be held. Arrangements have been made for a luncheon session, to be held jointly with the Woodrow Wilson Foundation and the American Society for Public Administration, at which a nationally known speaker will appear. The presidential addresses of the American Political Science Association and the American Society for Public Administration will be given on the evening of December 28.

In general, the program of the meeting will be as outlined in the August issue of the Review (pp. 717–719). The headquarters will be at the Sherman Hotel.

In accordance with a procedure introduced two years ago, the nominating committee of the American Political Science Association has canvassed the membership for suggestions for nominations for officers for 1943, and at the December meeting it will offer the following list of nominees: president, Robert E. Cushman (Cornell University); first vice-president, John M. Gaus (University of Wisconsin); second vice president, Peter H. Odegard (Amherst College); third vice-president, Denna F. Fleming (Vanderbilt University); secretary-treasurer, Kenneth Colegrove (Northwestern University); assistant secretary-treasurer, Harvey Walker (Ohio State University); members of the Executive Council: Clyde Eagleton (New York University); Charles Fairman (Stanford University); V. A conference on ‘‘Social Education in Wartime and After’’ will be held in New York City during the Thanksgiving holiday, November 26–28. The conference will constitute the twenty-second annual meeting of the National Council for the Social Studies. Government officials and social scientists will meet with teachers from elementary and secondary schools to consider what policies and practices should govern social-studies teaching in the United States during the war. Conclusions of the conference will subsequently be published by the National Council. Anyone interested in attending all or part of the conference should write for further information to Wilbur F. Murra, executive secretary, National Council for the Social Studies, 1201 Sixteenth St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

Professor Robert E. Cushman, of Cornell University, has taken the chairmanship of a special committee set up under the auspices of the Social Science Research Council, and sponsored by that body’s recently created Committee on Government, to deal with problems of research in the area of civil liberties. The immediate assignment of the special committee is to prepare an Outline of Research in the field, a first requisite for which is a full list of major organizations and agencies, official or private, which are studying or doing anything relevant to the problem, and also of studies in the field either projected or actually going on. To this end, all persons engaged in or knowing of activities of the sort are urgently invited to communicate with Professor Cushman.
A new course, to some extent integrating the various disciplines in their contributions to an understanding of the American scene, is being experimented with at the University of Washington. Each of half a dozen departments offers an "American Tradition" course. Instruction and examinations are conducted independently, but a series of evening lectures on the same general theme may be attended by all students registered in the various departments.

Under the auspices of the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University, in conjunction with the Parker Institute of International Affairs, a program of training in international administration has been instituted at Columbia, primarily to aid in the development of personnel capable of performing tasks of an administrative nature which Americans may be called upon to perform in such countries or territories as the United Nations may liberate or occupy. These tasks may be envisaged as ranging from those of the officer charged with maintaining security and administering temporarily the governments of the areas occupied, to those of the economic expert assisting in the rehabilitation and management of local economic institutions, or of the social worker who administers relief. The program is not concerned with the framing of plans or policies, but solely with the training of personnel to help in administering whatever plans are adopted.

During the past two years, at the State University of Iowa, a joint seminar has been conducted by the departments of political science, history, sociology, and economics. Enrollment has been limited to three candidates for the Ph.D. from each of the four departments. The staff consists of a representative from each area, and Professor Kirk H. Porter has represented political science. Members of the seminar present for discussion papers intended to raise problems of vital interest to advanced students in all fields concerned. In furtherance of this plan of cooperation, the four departments are offering during the present academic year a course entitled "The World Today," open to juniors and seniors majoring in one or another of the four departments. The class meets three times a week, one of the sessions being an evening public lecture. Lecturers are drawn from the University staff and deal with international problems of political, social, and economic character growing out of the war. Two discussion sessions are conducted each week by staff members from each of the four departments; and Professor Jacob Van der Zee represents political science. On the freshman level, three small experimental sections of first-year students are being conducted by staff members from political science, economics, and sociology. In these, an effort is made to present "basic concepts of social science," as distinguished from the conventional offerings in introductory courses in the three areas. In this work, Dr. Jack T. Johnson represents the department of political science.
