Editors’ Notes

EDITORS’ REPORT, SEPTEMBER 2001

The dual-editor regime, which has governed the operations of the JOURNAL for so long, assumed the form of a San Francisco Bay axis last year, as Gavin Wright at Stanford joined Jan de Vries at Berkeley to guide the JOURNAL’s affairs. Now the time is approaching to pass the baton of the Rest of the World editorship. At the end of June Jan de Vries and assistant editor Heath Pearson will return to civilian life and send their files and the burdens of editorship to C. Knick Harley of Western Ontario University.

De Vries wants to take this occasion to offer sincere thanks to Edna Tow, whose management of the editorial office has been efficient and good humored, and to the Berkeley History department and its Sidney Hellman Ehrman Chair fund, for generously supporting the editorial office. Wright extends the same appreciation to Scott Wilson, assistant at the Stanford office, for his steadfast service for the JOURNAL. Assistant editor Susan Isaac especially thanks Jim Cobbe and the Economics Department at Florida State University for their provision of office space and support, which has allowed her to continue her work with the JOURNAL.

In the 2000/01 editorial year most quantitative indicators of the JOURNAL’s health and intellectual direction revealed little change from the recent past. New submissions rose slightly, from 92 to 96, a number that remains consistent with the long-term, downward-sloping trend line of Figure 1.

Tables 1 through 3 show the distribution of new submissions by topic, region, and era. Each of these measures of the scope of the JOURNAL’s coverage reflects a continuation of the breadth that is a central goal of this publication. Table 3 does show a small upward trend in the percentage of submissions on pre-1800 topics, a development in which the outgoing editor takes some satisfaction. Table 2 reveals that the invisible hand that for so long had maintained parity between the submissions on North American topics and Rest of the World topics was lifted, resulting in a substantial shift in favor of the latter. Only the future will reveal whether inattention or design accounts for this cosmic event.

Source: The yearly totals were taken from the published Editors’ Notes.

Editors’ Notes

The increase from 92 to 96 in new submissions was more than offset by the decline in resubmissions from 40 to 30 and meant that the offices handled six fewer papers than last year. For submissions that have been decided, the acceptance rate declined from 27 to 21 percent, the revise-and-resubmit rate increased from 29 to 33 percent, and the rejection rate remained the same at 45 percent.

Note: The numbers include new submissions only. The totals equal the number of new submissions received because a paper is classified in only one topic category. In the latest year, the North American office had 56 total submissions, 38 new and 18 resubmitted. The office for all other regions had 70 total submissions, 58 new and 12 resubmitted.

\textit{Note}: The numbers include new submissions plus resubmissions.

On behalf of those who have benefited from thoughtful comments on their submissions and of readers who enjoy the end result of that honing process, the editors acknowledge a debt of gratitude to those who give so much of their time. Diligent referees, insightful book review authors, and dedicated members of the editorial board make it possible for the editors to fulfill their charge and continue the tradition of excellence for which the \textit{Journal} is known. Special thanks are due to those board members who have just completed four-year terms of service: Stephen Broadberry, Colleen Callahan, Gregory Clark, Joseph Ferrie, Jane Humphries, Kevin O’Rourke, and William Sundstrom. Our referees for the past year were:

- Brian A’Hearn, \textit{Franklin and Marshall College}
- Mark Aldrich, \textit{Smith College}
- Douglas Allen, \textit{Simon Fraser University}
- Lee Alston, \textit{University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign}
