

H. Bunney Esq. del.

Coles sculp.

Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read,
and cast account.

Cade. O monstrous!

Smith. We took him selling of boys' copies.

Cade. Here's a villain!

DICK the Butcher & SMITH the Weaver
seizing the CLERK of Chatham.

Smith. It is a book in his pocket, with red letters, out Dick. Nay, he can make obligations, and write court's hand.

Cade. Away with him. I say hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck. Title, 4th part of Henry 6th act 1. sc. 2.

London, Published August 30th 1795, by Tho^s. Machin, Bookseller, Fleet Street.

Coles, J., printmaker. Dick the Butcher & Smith the Weaver seizing the Clerk of Chatham. London: 1795.
Folger ART File S528k3b no.43.

This print imagines London in the chaotic throes of the Jack Cade Rebellion. After the Clerk of Chatham is brought to them, Cade and the other rebels execute him because of his position and literacy.

From an original in the Folger Shakespeare Library

Licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-ShareAlike 4.0 International License (CC BY-SA 4.0)