Help young learners to pursue their dreams

Preparing young learners for the fast changing world

At Cambridge, we believe that personal development is as important as academic achievement. This is why we are working with educators on ways to enhance English language programmes and address the demands of the 21st century: applying information rather than memorising it and learning to work well with others in diverse groups.

We've worked together to develop a life competencies framework to ensure that our materials keep pace with these changes and prepare learners for success.

To most children, school is where their life aspirations start. How do we prepare them to succeed in the fast changing world beyond the classroom? To collaborate with people from around the globe? To use thinking skills to solve complex challenges?

Our approach

The philosophy behind our materials for young learners is that English is more than a school subject. Learning needs nurturing through childhood, towards young adulthood and beyond. This is why we consider the impact that our materials have on children's academic achievement as well as social, emotional and cognitive development.

How do we achieve this?

Through partnership with researchers, specialists in education, assessment, child cognitive development and schools like yours, we are able to study how children learn and what materials effectively support teachers in their classrooms.
